Bob Ingersoll in the War.

One of Morgan's redoubtable men, recounting his exploits during the war, tells the story of the mominious capture of Colonel figurert G. Ingersoll. It is to the I that when his regiment was paged the cloquent Colonel was not to be found until a "beardless, fourteen-year-old boy" came marching him into camp, having captured him at the muzzle of a musket. He said he skeered up Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, the Colonel in a hog-pen, where he was concealed under the litter. The credit or discredit of hiding in any manner to escape capture depends wholly upon its issue. If successful it was a shrewd and admirable exploit, but if the enemy discover the hiding place the aspect is vastly charged. Passing over the possibility that the boy may have lied and the boaster now telling the story may not stiel: to the truth, we are brought into conthat with another charge against Robert. The raconteur goes on to say that the captive, by his genial manner and eloquent words, soon became a favorite with his captors. He was placed on escape parole and treated to the best that could be had. In the course of events he felt so obligated to his generous captors that he wished to return some of their hospitalities. So hesborrowed the sum of $100 in good Confederacy scrip and dispensed hospitality like a lord as long as it lasted. Now, what galls the gallant Morgan man is the fact that Ingersoll forgot to repay the money, although he gave his note in due form, and since the war has been dunned in regulation manner. Morgan's men are of the opinion that he is a hold, had man, and that his religion won't wash and is not worth 2 cents a yard. Bob ought to hunt up some Confederate scrip and pay the claim if it takes the last one-cent piece he can find in his pecket.-Indianapolis Journal. Chief Engineer Stone of the
