

The Daily Astorian.
 ASTORIA, OREGON:
 SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1883

Alert H. & L. meeting to-morrow evening.

The Gen. Miles will leave for Gray's harbor next Tuesday.

Geo. P. Wheeler has been appointed a notary public for Clatsop county.

The first shipment of the Northern Pacific Express company was on the Queen of the Pacific.

Occident Council No. 5, Order of Chosen Friends, will meet to-morrow night at 7:30. A full attendance is desired.

There will be German service by Rev. J. Muehlhaupt at 3 o'clock, in the Baptist church. All Germans are cordially invited.

A. F. Johns and C. J. Curtis, of this city, have been appointed as aids to the grand marshal on the occasion of the celebration at Portland next Tuesday.

Shippers by the Queen of the Pacific will have to sign general average bonds, and after an adjustment pro rata the loss of each will be determined.

There will be divine service in the M. E. church to-day at 11 a. m., and 7:30 p. m., by Rev. Wm. Roberts who will in future have charge of that church.

The rain fell all day yesterday, effectually putting out the forest fires and removing all fear from the minds of many who have been in a constant state of dread for months.

The stepon of Mr. Riddle, who was brought down in a paralyzed condition from Knappa, last Friday, died at the hospital yesterday morning, of concussion of the spine.

The work of lightening the C. D. Bryant began yesterday. As far as reached the cargo is uninjured, though there will be doubtless some damage to that stowed underneath.

Despite its arrogance the Oregonian is to be commended for its correct and generally impartial account of occurrence. It is the only newspaper, beside THE ASTORIAN, that had a correct statement in regard to the stranding of the Queen.

Arthur Foley, a four-year-old boy, who strayed on board the Columbia at Astoria, and was carried off, was found by officer Clinton on the arrival of the steamer at San Francisco. The little fellow was all right. He will be sent back to his parents on the Columbia Monday.

On Wednesday evening the Consolidated Jubilee Singers and Colored Minstrels play at Occidental Hall. The box sheet for the entertainment, and likewise for Howe's San Francisco company will be open at Straus' New York Novelty Store to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

The Victoria arrived in yesterday with freight from San Francisco; the State came in at an early hour with vegetables and fruit for Astoria, at which every one rejoiced and was exceedingly glad, for the enforced unloading of the Queen had caused a dearth of provisions. The Oregon sailed at 4 p. m.

Eastern papers are making fun of Washington territory names. A young lady who has been at Mollychukannuk, Mooselucmaguante, Ayboljockamejus, Magagadavie, Cobbosso, Contee, Togos, Tomhegan, Katspekewegan, Brassua, Azisooos, Ripogenus Ebeeme, Nahmakanta, Millnoket, Mousweak, Mattawankeng and other fashionable resorts down in Maine, had an awfully nice time, but she lamed her jaw in trying to tell the home circle in her village about her travels.

The steamer Queen of the Pacific has been gotten out of her perilous situation on Sand Island and is rid of the fate of many wrecks that have striven that desolate place.

We direct attention to the grammar, diction, implication, and assertion of the above. It is from the Oregonian, and is given as a sample of the comment that idiosyncrasy prompts. In this case there was no intent to be wrong, but it was easier to make a mistake than a mental effort at accuracy.

We do not just understand what the Walla Walla Union's idea is in calling the striking of the Queen on Clatsop spit, "a fortunate accident." Are loss of cargo, detention of passengers and mental disquietude elements of good fortune? Possibly the Walla Walla Union wants to keep "files of THE ASTORIAN" and show in future editorials what a terrible place the bar is because a vessel struck on projecting shore lines in a fog. Is it that that makes it "fortunate"? An explanation in the interest of humanity, is in order.

About the Size of it.
 There is no business in which men can undertake greater risks on less capital than the theatrical. A speculator goes in with a few hundred dollars, scrapes all his credit together, gathers a lot of amateurs or starving actors and actresses, tempts them with large promises, buys a job lot of old printing and starts off into the country with a piece which has either never been tried or has been a failure. Any successful piece falls into the hands of the larger speculators, who have greater facilities for imposing on the public. The company gets along through the first few towns all right, but it is seldom long before they get into difficulties; then money gives out, then baggage is seized for debt and the actors and actresses are left stranded in some place where they have no friends, and have either to be sent home by the charity of the public or have to struggle back through all sorts of discomforts and miseries, some of them becoming applicants to the Acter's Fund. This does not only a severe wrong to the people themselves, but it disgusts the people with theatrical shows and genuine, well-organized, good companies are not patronized. Every season these gangs are found in detachments, broken up and starting, all over the country, and every season another batch starts out to meet the same fate. If the reliable managers of the leading cities will combine with the managers of the smaller theaters on their circuits to bar out all attractions that are not genuine, they will not only save an amount of misery annually recorded in the newspapers, but they will relieve the public of a great deal of unpleasant experience, and they will find their ample reward in the profits they will make on the companies they do send out. As it stands, the theatrical business is one of quackery and imposture. There are only few men in it who are able to keep their engagements with the public. The hand-to-mouth policy is the only one possible to most of the adventurers, and bad plays, bad actors and starchy performances are all they can offer. This is simply beating the public and it is a point which should be taken into earnest consideration by all whose capital is invested in legitimate theatrical enterprises for their own sakes as well as for the sake of the public, who are not willing to be without amusement, but who do not care to support institutions that one-half the time take advantage of them.

Two of a Kind.
 The New Tacoma Ledger divides the honors with the Portland News for mean assertions regarding the stranding of the Queen. The Ledger in winding up a contemptible fling, says: "If the sea had been as rough on Tuesday afternoon as it usually is on the bar, the telegrams that burdened the line from Astoria to San Francisco would have carried the news of the drowning of hundreds of people, instead of gratulations upon their providential escape from watery graves. All that the above precious oceanic needs is the word 'only' after the fourth word, to exactly express what was in the mind of the creature that wrote it—a regret that the accident was not a catastrophe."

The programme for Henry Villard's guests this week includes two visits to Astoria. On Thursday, the 13th, at 9 a. m. the steamer Wide West and Thompson convey the special party here and return to Kalama, sleeping in the train, which will be transferred to bank opposite Kalama. On Friday, at 9 a. m. the general guests will start on the Columbia from Portland, proceed to Astoria, and return to Kalama at 9 p. m. Owing to the limited stay no general reception will be given as was first contemplated.

The directors of the Oregon and California R. R. company, give notice that they have filed supplementary articles of incorporation authorizing the corporation to engage in new enterprises, to increase its preferred or common capital stock, or both, and to construct and equip a railroad and telegraph line with all necessary branches from a point at or near Forest Grove in Washington county, Oregon, to Astoria, in Clatsop county, Oregon, to connect with its existing railroad, and to operate and maintain the same and carry freight and passengers thereon and receive tolls for the same.

The steamer Emma Hayward narrowly escaped serious disaster at the New Tacoma wharf the other morning. It was very smoky and foggy, and as she glided into her accustomed berth, she found herself suddenly almost afloat of the ship Two Brothers, which unconcernedly lay in the way without giving the least signal of warning to the approaching steamer. It was a narrow escape for the Hayward and all on board, for nothing could have saved the steamer had she struck the ship, and with her would beyond doubt have been lost a majority of those on board. Intense indignation was aroused among those on the steamer at the carelessness and disregard of the carelessness and disregard of those on board by the ship. —Port-Intelligence.

Cigars With a Flavor.
 "Most people like a flavored cigar," said an Indianapolis druggist to a Journal reporter who had stepped in to buy a weed. "Try one of these, I think you will like it." The reporter took one of the brand recommended to him, lighted it and began to smoke. "I have put up considerable cigars," continued the drug man, "and I suppose some people wouldn't find it so difficult a thing to quit smoking, if they knew what the popular flavors are made of. On second thought, though, I don't think it would make any difference. The fact that the old cigar-stumps are worked over into cigarettes and smoking tobacco, though thoroughly ventilated in the newspapers, never cured a smoker of the habit."

"Tell me something about these flavors," said the reporter.

"Well, since you insist on it, I will. A flavor I have made a good deal of—it's a flavor that, in the language of the trade, makes a 'ten cent cigar for five cents'—is made as follows: Gum guiac, gum tolu, tonquin beans and essence of pineapple, of each one ounce; valerian root, two ounces; laudanum (tincture of opium), one ounce; oil of rose, six drops; Jamaica rum, half a pint; macerate for thirty-six hours and pour off, use one ounce to a pint of port wine, to blow on the fillers."

"A good many men who get attached to a certain brand of cigars don't know what charms 'em. It's the opium, and they get in the habit of using it unconsciously. Valerian taken habitually renders the heart's action more rapid but feebler, causes hurried respiration and may occasion congestion of the kidneys. If its use is long continued it may paralyze the spinal cords, so the books say. Its action on the tongue and throat is more prompt and apparent, frequently causing epithelium. As to opium, its internal effects are well known. It would take an almanac to enumerate all the diseases it occasions. It's opium and valerian that makes the artificially flavored cigar popular."

What is Good for Breakfast.
 A delicious breakfast omelet is prepared by mixing the ingredients in the usual way and then placing whole apricots in the golden envelope before it is rolled. Another that was born beneath Spanish skies is similarly made, with the introduction of sliced bananas laid in the compound after the omelet is delicately browned in the sweetest of butter, then turned in the omelet. This has been discussed with appreciation by the writer at the table of a Spanish friend. Leigh Hunt, who was a mild epicure in his way, protested against other food for breakfast than toast, ham, tea or coffee, eggs, and always something potted. In our climate it may be added, and always, fruit the year around, for breakfast eat fruit. The earth and sky shares its life. Its flesh, filled with sunshine, needs no human basting. Its veins are sweet with fragrant dew formed into life by soft sighing winds. The ardent kisses of the summer sun paints the blushing cheek of the velvety peach, and fills with wine the purple grapes enshrouded in purple luxuriance, that drop through the leafy roof of trellised arches. Such a breakfast is patriarchal. It has a flavor of Arcadian days and the ethnologic age of a dead past.
