Rev. G. W. Rice, editor of the American Christian Register, says of Brown's Iron Bitters: "It is one of the few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey."

When the party was 140 kilometers east of the glacier border the soft snow prevented them from proceeding on sledges. The Lapplanders were, therefore, sent on with snow-shoes. The rest of the expedition visited the northwest coast, between Waigat and Cape York. They were informed by the Esquimaux that two members of the American Polar expedition had died and that the rest returned to Littleton Island. On the 16th of August the expedition sailed south from Egedesmond, making a short stay at Igvigut, Julianeshaub and Frederdale, and tried to proceed eastward three times through the sound, north of Cape Farewell, and along the coast, but the ice prevented. They went outside the ice field to latitude 66 deg., remaining continually in sight of land. The drift ice was forced south of Cape Don and on September 9th they anchored in a fjord newly visited by Esquimaux, where remains of the Norman period were found. This was the first time since the fifteenth century that a vessel has succeeded in anchoring on the east coast of Greenland south of the polar circle. After having tried vainly to anchor in another fjord to the north they returned and arrived at Reikavik September 19th.
