

The Daily Astorian

ASTORIA, OREGON: THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1883

SPECIAL NOTICE

Fifteen Cents Per Week.

Beginning on Saturday, October 27, 1883, THE DAILY ASTORIAN will be delivered to all parts of the city for fifteen cents per week, payable to the carrier.

The Little Bell is due from Wilmington.

The A. B. Field is advertised to leave for Tillamook this morning.

The American ship Mount Washington is advertised for sale.

It is reported in Washington that Gov. Newell, of Washington Territory intends to resign.

The roof of the new O. E. N. dock will be covered with tin; as there are about 800 square yards, it will be something of a job.

W. H. Gray writes that he and that portion of the pioneer party that went to the Empire city have arrived safely in New York.

Senator Dolph leaves Portland for the East in a special car this morning. The trouble in Washington begins on the 2nd of December.

Jo. Charters has moved to his new barber shop and is prepared to neatly perform any operation in capillary abridgement, or circuncular abscission.

The male patients of the Oregon State Insane Asylum were removed last Tuesday from their old quarters at East Portland to the new building at Salem.

The prevalence of scarlet fever raises the question in the minds of the school directors in district No. 1, whether it is best to temporarily close the school.

No. 1, Vol. 1, of The Daily Star, published at The Dalles, is received. It is a neat-looking five column folio. The Dalles is certainly large enough to support a daily paper, and the enterprise will doubtless succeed.

In the justice court yesterday afternoon the case wherein Wm. Joplin brought suit against J. H. D. Gray, for assault, was given to the jury which found a verdict against defendant who was fined $40 and costs.

The Seattle Herald speaks of the Queen City's Board of Trade "as a relic of prehistoric times, as a succedaneum of the carboniferous era, an oolitic monolith, the apex of which is just visible above the sedimentary deposits of a dead, unhappy past."

A gentleman recently returned from the Golden State, gives Governor Stoneham as authority for the statement that the Democrats propose to carry this coast at the next election by starting campaign newspapers at every available point. It is becoming evident that Cronin died too soon.

Council Proceedings.

The city council met in regular session last Tuesday evening, Mayor Hahn presiding. Present—Councilmen Case, Carruthers, Hume, Johns and Trenchard. A communication in regard to certain cases of appeal was received from City Attorney Winton, who, on motion, was instructed to have briefs printed. A communication from Astor Lodge, No. 6, K. of P., was referred to committee on public property. The report of street committee on the street superintendent's report for September, was adopted, as was also the report concerning sexton's report for September.

An ordinance extending the time for improving Cushing's court street was passed under suspension of the rules. Ordinances amending section 5 of ordinance No. 195, extending the time for the improvement of West Seventh street; providing for the time and manner of improving West Eighth street; requiring auditor and clerk to issue warrants for the collection of taxes for 1883; were all passed under suspension of the rules. Ordinances declaring the probable cost of improving West Seventh street, and Cushing's court street, were read for the third time and passed. Ordinances declaring the probable cost of improving Hamilton street; to prohibit and suppress gambling; to prohibit the sale of immature calves, and providing for the time and manner of improving Genovieve street, were read first and second times and referred to appropriate committees.

The following claims were ordered paid: Mrs. R. Quinn, $24.30; Morey & Co., $20.05; I. W. Case, $38.83; M. C. Crosby, $3.15; Arndt & Ferchen, $21.30. On motion council adjourned.

A musical and literary entertainment will be given in the M. E. church of this place, Friday, October 26th, at 7 1/2 o'clock p. m., under the auspices, and for the benefit of the Astoria Young Men's Christian Association.

The rooms of the society are in need of renovation and refitting in order to render them attractive and comfortable for the use of strangers and visitors during the coming winter. To aid in procuring the necessary funds for the desired improvements, the executive committee have decided to give the above mentioned entertainment, which will consist of vocal and instrumental music, readings and recitations, kindly furnished by some of our best local talent, and will close with a beautiful and impressive tableau. Several original features will appear in the programme, among which the Swedish ballad, by Mrs. Bagard, and a song in "Russian Finn," by Mr. Carlson.

B. F. Stevens & Co. have generously allowed the society the use of one of their fine pianos free of charge, which will add greatly to the pleasure of the occasion. The admission has been fixed at the low rate of 25 cents, so as to place an enjoyable evening's recreation within the reach of all friends of the cause and their families, and it is hoped they will avail themselves of the opportunity, and fill the pleasant church to overflowing.

Dr. Hinkle, principal of the National Surgical Institute (western division), 319 Bush street, San Francisco, will be at the Occident hotel, Astoria, Oct. 27, and at the St. Charles hotel, Portland, Nov. 22 and 23, for the purpose of examining and taking patients for this institution. Diseases of the spine, limbs, deformities, paralysis and all chronic diseases, specialties. References given.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

A Reminiscence of the "Shubrick."

Over the signature of "Rustler," Captain Tom Stratton, of Port Angeles, contributes the sketch following to the Port Townsend Argus:

As few of your readers ever heard how the Collector of Customs, Victor Smith, captured the Shubrick, then revenue cutter in this district, from the officers and crew, I thought it would interest them, as I can give the full particulars, having been on board at the time.

In '63 or '64, after Victor Smith, the then Collector of Customs, had established the port of entry at Port Angeles, he commenced erecting buildings for custom house and marine hospital, and to carry out his idea of economy, utilized the forces under his control in their construction. Inspectors and revenue cutters were all made to do their share of the work. The Shubrick was then in command of Capt. Pease, and was made to do the freighting of brick, lime and lumber, greatly to the disgust of the officers and crew. She made several trips to Port Madison and other places for brick and lumber, and it was laughable to see old Collins, the boatswain, piping the men on board with lumber on their shoulders growling and stumbling at every step. This went on for some time, Captain Pease remonstrating with the collector against such humiliating work, which he said was beneath the dignity of the service which he represented, and had a demoralizing effect on his officers and crew; but the collector paid no attention to them. At length Captain Pease and his officers could or would stand it no longer, and concluded to leave this station and go to San Francisco with the cutter, without asking permission, and then lay their case before the secretary of the treasury.

In the meantime, keeping their own counsel, they got permission to coal and wood up, which they did with an eye to their intended trip to San Francisco; for it was found afterward that she had on board eighty tons of coal and forty cords of wood. Whether the collector was informed of their intention or not, I don't know; but certain it was he had got wind of something and laid his plans accordingly, which succeeded to his entire satisfaction.

About that time there arrived at Port Angeles a special agent, D. W. Brown, to investigate the custom house affairs, to whom the collector appealed, and got his sanction to discharge the officers and crew, it was said, by charging the officers with secession proclivities, and he feared they were about to turn the Shubrick into a rebel cruiser, strengthening his suspicion by the extra fuel taken on board without his consent. How true this was I don't know, but subsequent events which transpired led me to believe that something of the kind was suspected and told to Special Agent Brown to get his consent to what he was about to do without informing the officers of the Shubrick.

Our country was at that time bleeding at every pore, and sanitary funds were collected everywhere to alleviate the sufferings of our soldiers in the field. Victor Smith, the collector, and P. D. Moore, the deputy, were very active collecting funds for that purpose. One morning the collector said to me:

"Do you want to go to Victoria?"

"Yes, I said."

"Well, said he, "give me three dollars for the sanitary fund and you can go over on the Shubrick."

"This I willingly did, not having the least suspicion of what was going to transpire on land.

When I got on board I was astonished to see so many passengers, and said to myself, "the sanitary fund has made a nice raise, if all of these men have paid three dollars like me." We got under way and steamed out of the harbor, Capt. Pease and officers directing everything as usual. I noticed the collector and special agent in close conversation all the time, and the other passengers standing in mysterious groups about the quarter-deck.

After crossing the center of the Straits of Fuca into British waters the revenue flag was hoisted down, and the national flag hoisted up, as is the custom. The collector called Captain Pease and his officers together, and, without any preliminaries, said:

"I relieve you of all further command on board of this vessel, together with the crew, and until further orders this vessel is under the command of Lieut. James Selden."

I noticed that what I thought were passengers collected together on the same side of the quarter-deck, and close to the collector. And when he had made his little speech, Capt. Pease turned to them and said:

"You've come on board of this ship to take the command out of my hands; do you think you could do it if I objected? No, sir! One word from me and you would not remain one minute on this quarter-deck; but I submit, knowing that I will receive justice from the hands of the department which I represent." Turning to the officers he said: "Gentlemen, let us prepare to leave the ship," and they went below.

At the time I was standing alongside of Lieut. Selden, and was perfectly astonished at what I heard, and turning to Selden, said:

"What does this mean?"

"I do not know," he replied; "some of Victor Smith's new arrangements."

All discipline was at an end. The old crew did not know what to make of it for awhile, but soon learned how things stood and became very insolent to those whom the collector had brought on board to replace them, interfering with them on every occasion.

There was only one sailor among them, and he was sent to the wheel. It was then I saw the meaning of so many passengers. The collector called them together and told them to do the best they could to work the vessel into Esquimaux. Calling on me, he asked if I would not take charge of them and assist him, as he was afraid there would be trouble with the old crew before they got to anchor. I replied that I had paid my passage to Victoria and it was none of my fight, and I would have nothing to do with it. About this time some of the old crew got some liquor somewhere and became terribly noisy, interfering with the new men. Lieut. Selden called to me, saying:

"Tom, if you are a friend of mine you will help me out of this scrape. I don't know any of these men, or what they can do. I wish you to organize them, and send some into the fire room, and some to pass along wood; and for God's sake don't have any trouble with the old crew; don't mind what they say, so long as they keep their hands off, for I fear, if there is a blow struck, there will be blood spilt before we get to Esquimaux."

I told him for his sake I would do my best. I soon got them in working order, the old crew continually interfering, calling all kinds of vile names. We paid no attention to them, but kept on with the work. We soon got into Esquimaux, where the officers and crew were landed, and then steamed around to the mouth of Victoria harbor and anchored for the night, all going on shore except Lieutenant Selden, Thos. Winship, the engineer, and three others besides myself to guard the vessel.

We steamed back to Port Angeles the next day, feeling very glad we had got the old Shubrick back again all right, as few besides myself knew the dangerous position she was in the night we lay outside Victoria harbor with only five men on board; for at that time there was a regular organized crew in Victoria of fifty men, with all the officers and engineers complete, to capture the Shubrick and make a Confederate cruiser of her, for which at that time she was adapted, being swift and well-armed with four broadside and two long pivot guns, besides eighty tons of coal and twenty cords of wood, and not a vessel on the coast to cope with her. They intended to burn all the mills on the Sound, and on a voyage of destruction among our coasting vessels, but thanks to the vigilance of Mr. Allen Francis, our consul at Victoria, then and now, also Lieut. James Selden, now captain and on waiting orders at Seattle, the Confederates never made the attempt on this side of the Straits. I afterward learned that had we laid one night longer at that month of Victoria harbor, they would have taken her, the result of which would have been very disastrous to the milling interests of our rising territory.
