A FEW OBJECTIONS.

THERE is an earnest and praisworthy effort now making to revive but also all other officers of an Amerthe building of ships in this country, and replace the American marine in the proud position it once States. Stockton, J. W. Hare, J. W. Brown, our competitors. This is conclusively established by the fact that, although for some ten years we have been able to build wooden sailing vessels about as cheaply as they can be built anywhere, yet there has been, during the same period, a steady diminution in the tonnage even in our wooden sailing ships employed in foreign commerce. More than half of our exports and imports are still transported by bailing vessels, yet only a third of this half is conveyed under the American flag. The carrying trade of Norway, which has so signally increased during the last twenty years, has been built up at our expense; yet the Norwegian merchant navy is almost exclusively composed of wooden vessels.
