LOSS OF THE ALPHA.

A Total Wreck-The Cryw Missing.

Reliable report comes to The Astorian PORTLAND, Dec. 6, 1883.—A dispatch from Hobsonville, Tillamook county just received from St. Helen's says that that the schoone: Alpha, which left here Frank Pierce, a young man employed as two weeks ago last Saturday, is lost with superintendent of a dairy, the property of all hands, Collins, Starr, and Gabrielsen. had also been some misunderstanding concerning the amount due for wages from Cloninger for work that Pierce had done on a barn.

SECOND DISPATCH.

Pierce was brought here this evening on the Manamillo. He is suffering severely from profuse internal hemorrhage. Physicians say he cannot recover. Cloninger is a wealthy farmer and is well known all along the Columbia river.

Fuller's Point she broached to and went into the breakers. She drifted for two miles, and as well as the watchers at Hobsonville could make out had lost all sails and was badly stove, nothing was seen of her, but as her boats have come ashore at Tillamook, and the beach is covered with wreck and damaged goods, the probability is that she is lost. The Alpha was a staunch little craft and was well known here, having plied between the Columbia river and the southern coast. She was owned by Wm. Olsen, of Tillamook. Tillamook.

He wore the con and the several classes of the Latin school, and finally had spent a year at a French school at Praizbourg, in Lor-reine. He terminated his parsuit of knowledge by taking "French leave" of the University of Munich. School life had grown monotonous. He had entered had grown monotonous. He had entered upon it at six years of age, and twelve years later had concluded to seek his fortune. The youth tramped to the home of his father, who then occupied a judicial bench in the town of Zweibrucken. With bench in the town of Zweinrucken, with a fair show of meckness and contrition the son listened to the anticipated censure and then coolly proposed that his father should settle upon him a small fortune with which he desired to speculate in American cities. The result of this interview was that a few days later Hainel Halles and the second settle settlement of the same and the second settlement of the same and the settlement of the second s Heinrich Hilgard left the parental roof with sufficient funds to carry him across the ocean to a settlement in a remote corner of Illinois, where an uncle had preceded him a year before and was enpassed in farming.

Heinrich, it is said, had left behind a beautiful French maden, whose acquaintance he had made while attending college at Lorraine, and his step in entering upon the world had been induced by an ambition to become worthy of her hand. On November 3, 1853, the young main On November 3, 1853, the young man landed in Castle Garden. The grandeur of the metropolis dazed him. Instead of going at once to Illinois he decided to try his fortune there. A year of misfortunes and ill-luck, however, served to alter his mind considerably. With a sinking heart he sought his relatives in the township of Belleville, St. Clair county, Illinois, and there remained as a farm assistant for several years.

During the long winter evenings Henry, as he had now become known, amused as he had now become known, amuse as he had now become known, amused himself by corresponding for German papers at his old home. At last he sceured a little money for his articles in a German paper in St. Louis; This was the turning point in the career of the ambitious youth. He soon increased his knowledge of the English language by diligent study, and soon after settled in St. Louis, where he obtained employment. Then he interested himself in ment. Then he interested himself in the progress of the rapidly-increasing western cities and wrote glowing ac-counts to the New York Tribune and Her-ald. In 1838 he was engaged to report the political campaign between Lincoln and Longlass for the New York press. He rapidly rose in journalistic circles and then for the first time the name of Henry Villad H P Smith, Antwerp D C Campbell, city
