NOT WRECKED BY BADLY DAMAGED.—Captain Olson, master of the coasting schooner Alpha, supposed to have been wrecked, writes from Tillamook, under date of the 5th inst. to White, Goldsmith & Co., that after a terribly stormy voyage of twelve days he crossed the Tillamook bay on Wednesday, the date of the letter. The evening after she crossed out from Astoria, she was struck by a storm which swept her decks clean, carrying away the water tanks and most of the supplies.

For ten days the crew were almost without water, having to depend on what little was caught during the slight rainfalls. The cargo is badly damaged, though how badly he was not able to estimate, and could not till the vessel was discharged. The insurance, he says, will probably cover the losses in full. Oregonian, 5.

DEEP AND GRAY'S RIVERS NOTES.

From an Occasional Reporter.

Editor ASTORIAN:

With a considerable frontage to the magnificent Columbia river, this frontage pierced by such well defined rivers as the Deep and Gray's—available by the deepest draught ships; its surface covered with good timber; its hills lined with economic and valuable minerals; with sufficient agricultural lands, when cleared, to feed over a million of inhabitants, and pastoral lands upon which can be raised the choicest grade of horses, sheep, and cattle; with its waters abounding in the finest fish from the imperial salmon to the lowly sturgeon; with an climate unsurpassed for mildness and salubrity; with water power sufficient to drive the machinery of the world—such is Wahkiakum, the smallest, nicest, richest, best, most cosmopolitan county (as far as the present generation is concerned) in the whole extent of Washington Territory.

Between Stark's Point and Harrington's Point are the mouths of Gray's river, and Deep river, and on one another. The physical appearance of Gray's bay is very peculiar. I feel convinced that the whole bay was formerly the bed of some inland sea. The bay may be said to resemble a horse shoe in appearance. Looking at it from Harrington's Point the view is grandly beautiful. The water in Deep river is wonderful depth, as opposite Olsen's I am told it is 62 fathoms deep, while in front of Colonel Shaw's beautifully located residence, in the middle of the stream, the tide lands are, generally speaking, covered with evergreens, and when properly ditched will support most valuable lands in the world. Their fertility may be said to be inexhaustible and these lands will never be worn out or require manure like the Willamette valley lands and other lands.

Game of nearly all kinds is abundant. Deer and bear are to be found here; large numbers of grouse and pheasants, and immense flocks of the well known mallard ducks are to be seen quietly feeding on the flats within gunshot range of the tourist's gun. These rivers also abound with the finest trout in the world. To the lover of nature's charms, and to those in search of health and pleasure, I would say, there are few more attractive places than along these rivers. One is seldom afforded on any other beautiful scenery, even in a lifetime of constant travel. However, to be appreciated one must not rush right through on the general Captain Raphael's boat. To take his time, spend a month prospecting about; take a few Russian vapor baths which he can have gratis—at nearly every place along these rivers.
