The California Redwoods

A writer who was an eye witness to the operation says it is a magnificent yet painful sight to witness the operations in one of those redwood forests. You stand in the midst of visat trees, so close together that there is a an arm of the standard o trees, so close together that there is a dim religious light around you, like that of a cathedral. This decision is furthered by the apparent regularity with which many of these trees grow.

You can look down a long aisle as if it were a grained arch of a cathedral roof, and the only thing which undersoon, and the only thing which undersoon is not looking up far above your head, to see rifts of blue roof, and the only thing which un-deceives you is, on looking up far above your head, to see rifts of blue sky between the branches. But you are suddenly startled by a long cry of trembles slightly for a moment, then inclines in the direction toward which the practiced woodman has designed it to fall. It topples—it falls. There is an awful crash—the fulling tree is smiting the branches from a fellow tree which stands upright, but not for long. There is a sound like a peal of thunder—the tree has struck the ground. The earth frembles for rods around, as if there were an incline of like a like in the like it is a like in the like it is a like in the like in th around, as if there were an earthquake; there is a cloud of dust, and all is over. The redwood is a most valuable kind of timber. It is very slow to burn, and if ignited is easily extinguished. It is very heavy and very splitting with the utmost accuracy and yielding to the saw, chisel, etc., with the utmost ease. When polished it makes a most handsome wood for interior fittings, and many of the finest houses in California are fitted with the wood in its polished state.

Indeed a discounter and worked and the carried fix and other advertised remedies, but experienced to refer that I procured the Currica-fix and irregularly curredine, allaying that terrible itesing, and restoring my skin to its natural color. I am willing to make an afficient to the truck of this statement.

Milan, Mich.

The Meaning of the Word Christmas.

The termination "mass" is derived from the Saxon maesse, which means a feast. Hence our word "mess, Some think it is a pure Saxon word, others that it is derived from the Latin missa, signifying the dismissal of an assembly, and afterwards the assembly so dismissed. It passed into a termination for the great festivals of the church on which the feast of the holy communion was celebrated. The word "mass" is the technical word in the Roman Catholic Prescriptions carefully Compounded Church for the holy communion. Christmas, then, means the feast or services on the day of Christ's birth.

THE HERITAGE OF WOE are suddenly startled by a long ery of warning, which follows the rhythmic chopping sound of the ax and the swish of the saw. It is the woodman, and his melancholy cry portends the fall of a mighty tree. There is a long and labored groaning sound; it is the tree breaking away from the friendly base which has held it, perhaps for ages. Then there is the sharp "crack." The tree has snapped in twain. The mighty mass trembles slightly for a moment, then inclines in the direction toward which
