A nod or a smile, or a kindly word Fannic Wilson for. A nod or a smile, or a kindly word in passing costs nothing, but they go a long way towards making the path of life pleasant and smooth. It is like a gleam of sunshine in a cloudy sky, and warms the soul with its rays. Nod to your friend when you meet him, no matter how often in the day, and give him a smile for it will make him feel that you are glad and pleased to meet him, and that he is not alone in the world.

The Stage Chandelier.

They have an obstinate piece of stage property in a theater up the country, in the shape of a stage chandelier. The manager of the theater bought it cheap during one of his trips east, and had it swung up above the center of the stage The trouble is that the chandelier, being ovable, has to be east in every scenof every play that is put on at that the ster. Of course, it is all right and proper to have a big six-light; gilded chandelier in a scene representing a parlor or banquet hall, but to have that same chandelier bob up in a weird forest scene, or deher bob up in a weird forest scene, or in a lowly garret, is provoking, to say the least. On the opening night the first ap-pearance of the chandeher was hailed with screams of delight and approval by the audience. But in the second act, which was laid in a wild mountain pass, with snow and sleet and thunder and lightning the appearance of the abundance. with snow and sleet and thunder and lightning, the appearance of the chande-lier struck the andience as an intrusion, which spoiled the unity of the drama. Some of the boys didn't seem to care so much, for they had paid their money and wanted all the chandelier they could get, especially as it had been billed by the management as one of the chief attracespecially as it had been billed by the management as one of the chief attractions. But in the next act, which represented a shipwreck on a desert island, the chandelier palled on the public taste, and the audience demanded that it be immediately suppressed. The manager was forced to come forward and explain mattes, and finally succeeded in quieting the audience by promising them that a local play-writer would write a play expressly for the chandelier, in which it would appear in every act. In the next act the chandelier put in a successful appearance in a scene representing an Indipearance in a scene representing an Indi-an campon the plains, and the applause from the audience was spontaneous and hearty.

When the day was reached a tremendous crowd, numbering 15,000 persons, gathered at Mississippi City. At 11:47 o'clock Suffivan appeared in the ring, weighing 193 pounds. Ryan appeared at 12:02 o'clock, looking rather the worse for his severe training. In 11 minutes and in the ninth round the battle ended in favor of Sullivan. Ryan of language that surprises the house into

On his tour Sullivan has mot and knocked out six men. The first was James McCoy of McKeesport, Pa., who had already whipped 15 men and who afterward made a name for himself by faghting 111 rounds with a broken wrist. Then came a man called Hefey, an enomp, half girl, half woman. She has a taking way about her, sings a good song, and goes through her part with vivacity. Her "Sing, Sweet Bird," was especially well received. The duet "Goodbye," was another fine vocalization. She reminds one a good deal of Lotta, and is as great a favorite with her audiences. To-night she fills a farewell engagement in Portland. the postmaster is one of his own appointments, and in many respects a suitable person for the office. Then there is some dissatisfaction among the merchants about the management of the custom house, and a delegation visit washington to urge the collector's removal. This our representative will not do, but promises not to recommend his reappointment and the delegation goes home only half satisfied.

Time goes on and the next election comes around, and our representative wakens on a pleasant morning to find himself defeated. The postoffice and collectorship have spread discontent. His rival is a young man with cle in hands and a clear head, a vigorous, self-confident man sure to succeed. Our representative has nothing more to exrepresent tive has nothing more to expect from that district. He returns to Washington sore in spirit to serve out his remaining three months in congress. He tries to put on a brave front and go on with his legislative work, but his heart is not in it. His future constantly obtrudes itself between him and his duties. His law practice, should he re-sume it after the 4th of March, insures same it after the 4th of March, insures him no immediate return of ready money, and of course, he has saved nothing from his salary of $5,00). That has been exhausted by the demands of Washington society. The outlook is not bright. He begins to consider what an unjust thing it is for the government, after taking the best years out of a man's life, to set him adrift te shift for himself. He reflects on the ingratitude of the pro-He reflects on the ingratitude of the peo-ple whom he has served so faithfully and determines never to make his home among them again. His counsel is neither so often sought nor his advice so often taken. One of his appointees in the de-partments has already been discharged to make room for somebody else, and taking one consideration with another the representative's "life is not a happy one." -Roscoe Dixon's new eating house is now open. A LAME DEFENSE.

Some of our exchanges are making a terrible "hoo doo" about the vote given by Congressman George against the Holman resolution favoring the forfeiture of all the unearned land grants. We do not boom Holman's chance for the Democratic nomination for the presidency, than for any practical purpose. The resolution can have no legal force, and will not have the effect to restore a single acre of land to the public domain. A forfeiture can only be declared by axionic law and not by resolution. When forfeiture can only be declared by a xecific law, and not by resolution. When a bill is presented for the forfeiture of a particular uncarned grant, it will be time for Mr. George to show his hand.

The resolution was general in its terms and many voted for it because it did nothing beyond inflating a presidential bubble for Congressman Homen. If Mr. George did not feel like giving Holman's kite a boost, it was entirely his own affair.

When, however, the question comes up in some practical form, Mr. George will in some practical form, air. George will have an opportunity to vote to some purpose. There doubtiess are some land grants that ought to be declared forfeited, and some again that ought not, which by the terms of the resolution were included. The grant between Asteric and Forcet Green still measured. toria and Forest Grove is still unearned and should be restored to the public do-main. If we understand Mr. George's and should be restored to the public domain. If we understand Mr. George's bill, it is proposed to restore the grant to the public domain and open the country to settlement under existing laws of the United States. Under this bill the grant is forfeited, so far as the claim of any mailroad is concerned, and for the purpose of settlement it is to be thrown open on the same conditions that other lands are.
The objection to Mr. George's bill, as made by some of our contemporaries, is that it provides that all moneys paid to the government by the sales of the lands within the present grant within the next ten years shall be set aside and held in reserve and paid to the company that should first build and equip a railroad from Astoria to Forest Grove of the standard guage. Why this provision of the bill should be objected to is not clear, unless it be that no railroad is wented.
There is certainly nothing in the bill to There is certainly nothing in the bill to prevent the settlement of the country, and there is nothing to prevent the build and there is nothing to prevent the oaining of the road by any company that may undertake the construction. No preference is given any company except to the company first building the road. Besides, it offers an inducement to any company that will undertake the work in the value of all lands that may be sold with in ten years along the line of the road.— Salem Statesman, 30.

If our Salem contemporary wishes to champion Mr. George it undoubtedly has that right. And if, as it suggests, that the resolution was "buncombe," Mr. George had (as in any case) abundant right to vote against its adoption. But i was not "buncombe." It was an expression of opinion concerning the justice of certain proposed action. Irrespective of party 251 representatives of the people said "Yes; forfeit these unearned grants." Eighteen (among them our Oregon representative) said "No!" It was more than we of Clatsop county expected. We were more than sorry to see the vote.

As to the bill that he introduced, it would, if passed, constitute a richer grant than the one which congress proposes to forfeit-and will.
