THE SQUATTER'S FOOL.

"I am looking for a stray horse," said a man stopping at the house of an Arkansawyer...

"What sorter horse?" "Sorrel, with a white star in his forehead."

"How long's he been gone?" "About a day and a half."

"Good work nag?" "First rate." "Wanter swap him fur a better one?"

"No, I believe not." "White star in his forehead yer say?" "Yes."

"An' yer don't wantter swap him?" "No, I believe not." "Certain he's a good work nag?"

"Of course I am." "An' yer don't wantter swap him for a better one?"

"Here, my friend, I haven't time to talk such nonsense. I want to know if you have seen anything of the kind of horse I described?"

"Why didn't you say so?" "I did." "Yer didn't. Said that's the kind of hoss yer was lookin' fur, but yer didn't ax if I'd seen him."

"Excuse me, for I intended to. He got loose and I have looked for him nearly everywhere."

"Good work nag?" "Splendid, the best I ever saw." "Don't wantter swap him for a better one?"

"I told you know." "But that was before you axed if I'd seen him."

The searcher after information looked at the squatter with a hard stare, but the squatter, undaunted, leaned on the fence...

"Well, now, here stranger, of yer out lookin' fur fools, les get down and wait till my son-in-law comes from the still house. Talkin' 'bout fools, mister, yer're way behind the latest diskiveries. Tell yer what that son-in-law o' mine done. We was killin' hogs the other day and the hussel of 'em was such that I had scolded myself an' hung myself on the pole, afore yer 'er bo' he did. Tell yer 'nurther thing he done: Come from meetin' 'tother night an' put th' mule in the house an' went out an' stood all night in the lot. Stranger, don't talk 'bout fools in this neighborhood. Lesser yer wantter git floored. Yer, say, a feller insulted my son-in-law 'tother day an' he kicked himself 'cross the road."

"That has nothing to do with my horse, and I want you to tell me whether or not you have seen him?" "Well, tell me 'zactly what sorter hoss he is."

"Good work nag?" "As good as I ever saw, and—" "Don't wantter trade him for a better one, do yer?" and the squatter dodged just in time to avoid a blow which the stranger leveled at him.

So far as the Arkansawyer man is concerned, the sorrel horse with a white star in his forehead, the good work nag which the stranger did not care to swap for a better one, is still at large.—Arkansawyer Traveler.
