A MODERN HERCULES.

George Moats, a Rustic Giant, Carries 300 Pounds a Distance of One Mile Without a Single Rest—Misaps on the Way.

"A wonderful act isn't it?" remarked a gentleman in the audience at the museum, as the "iron-jawed" man raised the barrel of water high in the air with his teeth. "How does it strike you, Uncle Jerry?"

"Uncle Jerry" was a tall, gaunt man, whose sunburnt face, slouch hat, and ill-fitting clothes gave him a decidedly provincial air. "Wal, it's purty good," said he, reflectively, as he scratched his chin, "but it looks ter me like a trick—somethin' he ez practiced for a long time. Git him away from his bar! an' I reckon he ain't so stout. But talkin' about weight-lifters, I know a feller in this state as is a weight-lifter, and a weight-carrier, too; uv which latter I will remark that ain't many. I knowed him when I used ter buy bogs down in Illinoi, nighr ont ten year ago. He lived in Princeville, a little town in Peoria county, which wuz always just as big as it is now, and allays will be. Moats wuz this feller's name—George Moats. He wuz about 55 years old when I knowed him—past his prime, but a hustler yet. He wuz built like the statues ye see in the drug store windows uv ole Atlas a holdin' up the world, and wuz the only man I ever see that had no armpits. They wuz rounded out with muscle, and made him carry his arms bowed ont like a dood. He weighed about 250 pounds, and I reckon he wuz one of the slouchiest men on earth at that time. All the clothes he wore wuz a pair uv overalls an' a cotton shirt, an' he gen'ally had about a considerable dose uv liker; but George wuz one uv the best natured men in the world, an' as far as ter say, no man knowed his strength. "The best thing I ever see George do wuz to carry 300 pounds a mile without layin' it down or restin' on the way. No you fellers look as ef that wuzn't much uv a trick, but let me tell yer it's a big thing. Any yer, he'n if 300 pounds and mebeey carry it except the world, but wuzn't will yet fine a man that's got the nerve ter pack it a mile without weakenin'."

"It happened this way: I hed ben a-stayin' aroun' Princeville some time a-buyin' up shoals fur winter fatin', an' one afternoon wuz a-settin' in the hotel porch with a lot uv fellers, George amongst the rest. George wuz full of liker, as usual. He wuz mashed down inter a chair, half asleep, his head on his breast, an' his big, bare feet turned up ter the sun aginst a post. A little sport uv a feller, named Charlie Fast, wuz a readin' in a Chicago newspaper how a feller there hed tried to carry 300 poun's uv shot a mile in the expression, an' hed fell down on the way, an' hed likt a fat hog, an' sez he, "That feller mus' be a clump; my ole woman kin do it."

"I'll bet ten dollars you can't do it," sez Charlie, a-winkin' at the boys. "This kinder riled George, an' sez he: "Ye wouln'd say that, Charlie, ef yer knowed I hed ten dollars."

"Jest then Charlie Fast come outen the saloon, an' sez he: "I'll take the bet, if George sez he kin do it."

"An' then ole Jim Rice, the landlor' uv the house, sez: "I'll take three dollars of the same, fur I know George kin pack anything he kin lift." So Charlie tuk 'em both an' the money wuz put up in my han'. George wuz ter get half the bet, if he done it, an' Charlie wuz ter pick the mile ter be traveled and the weight.

"We went across the road ter the drug store an' got two 100-pound kegs uv white lead. Each one wuz put into a grain sack, the two tied together and slung across George's neck. The whole thing weighed 300 pounds, an' wuz on him the wuzt way possible.

"It wuz a blazin' hot day an' the black Illinoi mud wuz six inches deep. Charlie hed picked out the south road from town, 'cause it wuz up hill an' down. As the roads wuz purty slippy, an' George wuz shirty drunk, it wuz decided that he shud have a munit ter get up in a cool like fell down. So arter considerable wranglin' about one thing an' another, which wuz a pint made by Charlie ter tucker George out before the walk begun, the null town started down down the road, George a-leadin'." The knot on the back uv his neck kep' a-botherin' him a good deal, so he kep' a-shittin' the kegs, sometimes on his back, sometimes on his breast, an' agin carryin' one on each arm, an' all the time a-staggerin' under his whiskey, an' a-sippin' an' slidin' aroun' in the mud, like he wud fall every munit.

"The mile ended with the fast cross-roads, and the last stretch uv it wuz up a steep hill. George kep' up all right till he started up this hill, when the kegs, the mud an' the liker got the best uv him and down he went. He hed got the idee in his head that he musn't put his han' on the groun' ef he fell, or he wud lose the bet. So, instid uv breakin' the fall with his han's, he throwed 'em aroun' on his back, an' the 300 poun's aroun' his neck shot him inter the mud like he'd ben throwed ont a house. He spat-tared mud on the bull party when he lit, an' thar he lay, his head half buried in the mud, an' one clear eye a-blinkin' up at us like a blear coal in the sabb. Charlie Fast got out his watch a purty soon he said: "Half a munit, George. But George sed nothin' an' we that he wuz dun. "Jist then ole Vaughn Williams pulled out his wallet, kind-a-solemn like, unwrapped the shoestring from it, wet his finger, an' sed: "Genelmen, I'll bet $50 he gits up with it on time."

"The boys all yelled an' looked at George, and Charlie sez: "Ye've got jist ten seconds more." And then George spit the mud ont his mouth, an' sez: "If ye think fifty dollars' worth that I kin get up with this here Vaughn, I'm a-right ter git up." An' he did. He rose right up offen his stumak without movin' his han's an' them two kegs a-danglin' over his face like two big ear-drops; an' while the boys wuz a-yellin' he walked up ter the top uv the hill an' throwed them kegs over a stake-an'-rider fence seven-rai high. We hed ter let the fence down ter get the kegs back inter the road, an' thar wuzn't a man in the crowd as end lift both uv 'em an' put 'em in the wagon we hed fetcbed along ter haul 'em back. Fred Beach luffed, an' sed he reckon-ed as how he wuz a jedgy uv man-flesh as well as hoas-flesh. An' Charlie Fast he jist cussed, an' sed he'd seen luck like his'n run on for a year at a time, an' then turn 'roun' an' get wuzed; but he said he never lose $15 easier, an' George he'd earn't his half uv it, sure. But ole Vaughn Williams he chuckled kind-a low like, an' spit out his tobacco, an' sed he acted like George wuz a powerful man, but he knowed that George's son O'cu'l carry the ole man an' his load.—Chicago News.

MR. BABB, of Iowa, has introduced in the legislature of that state a joint resolution authorizing the governor to invite the governors of all other states and territories to send delegates to a convention, to be held in Des Moines, to consider the question of calling together a body of men from all the states to frame a common code of laws on marriage and divorce, with a view to soliciting the concurrence therein of all the states. In short, it is a plan to bring about a treaty between sovereign states upon matters concerning which their laws are now so widely at variance as to cause great friction, fraud and injustice, and to stimulate crime and wrong-doing, and to lessen the sanctity of the marriage tie. Constitutional amendment will be a slow process, and it will raise the question of centralization and antagonize the radical states' rights sentiment. Yet the states, by commissions, can be brought into harmony on this subject. If not all the states should agree to it, still if any considerable number concur, it will result in time in bringing all into the compact.
