Office-Seekers in the White House.

An anecdotal paper on "The White House," by E. V. Smalley, is the opening illustrated paper in the April Century. Office-seekers he says in part: "The late President Garfield once said that he was obliged to see an average of thirty persons for every office to be filled. If the question was one of removal, the number was much greater, including the friends of the incumbent as well as the candidates for the place. There is an amusing story, not a new one by any means, of the method Mr. Lincoln adopted to settle a contest over a postmaster-ship which had greatly annoyed him. There were two candidates in the field, and petition after petition had poured in upon the weary president, and delegation after delegation had rubbed to the White house to argue the claims of rival aspirants. Finally, after he had been bored for half an hour by a fresh delegation, Mr. Lincoln said to his secretary, 'This matter has got to end somehow. Bring a pair of scales.'

Davy Crockett was a good sort of man to let alone, and most jokers learned to treat him that way, after a few costly experiments. The following old anecdote is good enough to repeat - to prevent its being forgotten: When Crockett was in Washington, he was one day in a hotel, when a senator from Massachusetts entered. Approaching the old frontiersman the latter said, "Crockett, a large body of your constituents are marching up the street; you ought to go greet them."

Crockett hurriedly arose and went out upon the hotel steps, when a drove of mules caught his eye. He quietly watched them until the lead one had passed, and then returned to his seat by the stove. The Massachusetts senator was still there, and as the redoubtable Davy dropped into his chair, asked: "Well, did you see your friends?" "Oh, yes," was the response. "They are looking remarkably well, too." "Did you ascertain their destination?" "Certainly."

"And where are they going in such a body?" Crockett turned to the senator with a quiet, calm expression, and replied: "They're going down to Massachusetts to teach school."

A foreign correspondent says that "Bismarck drinks beer." These foreign correspondents do pick up some startling news over there. An impression prevailed in this country that Bismarck was a member of the prohibition party and went around making temperance addresses. Next thing we may expect to hear that he eats sauerkraut and schweitzer kase.

Iowa society item, taken from the Des Moines Register: "There was a leap year ball in Bryan, the other night, and a pretty girl danced her dainty slipper off. The toe that poked out of the hole in her stocking was so pink and pretty that she was forgiven the crime of having an unremended stocking on."
