Sea Otter Hunting

ing sea otter hunting and the habits of the animals. Mr. Glover has been in this business for several years, and has two partners engaged in hunting on the beach. They are located about fifteen miles up the beach from the mouth of Gray's harbor, and hunt from a rock situated out in the breakers, which they reach by a canoe. While firing at an otter n few days ago, he burst his rifle, and had to come here to get it repaired. had to come here to get it repaired. The hunters, he says, use Sharp's rifle, that make proving the best of all others. The guns weigh fitteen pounds, and carry one hundred grains of powder, with lead in proportion. A few years ago, the otter were very tame, and could be killed with almost any gun at short range, but now tame, and could be killed with almost any gun at short range; but now they are very sky, and their average shooting is a quarter of a mile. This makes the killing of the animals quite uncertain; besides they have also to calculate for the force of the wind, if it is blowing. The force of the wind will often carry a ball two feet out of line in the distance of 400 yards. They also use raised sights, and in calculating the distance may over or under shoot. No old otters which have been wounded are now seen, have been wounded are now seen, showing that they have become more shy as improved guns are used. The otter range extends from Gray's harbor about twenty-five miles north along the coast, and it is believed the otter never leave it. There is an-other range near Port Orford, one on Vancouver island, and others further Vancouver island, and others further north. Harry Witherall, one of the best and oldest otter hunters, has gone this summer to try his luck on the west coast of Vancouver island. The otter usually weighs from seventy to eighty pounds, and is about the size of a large mastlff. It has no legs forward, however, like a dog, but has flippers in their place. When in full season the fur is a fine and glossy black. One was killed off the beach from a canoe, by an Indian, in April, which brought one hundred dollars, and was a fine one. The price ranges and was a fine one. The price ranges from fifty to one hundred dollars each, about seventy-five dollars being the usual price at this time. It is seldom they are killed from a canoe now, although the Indians formally killed them in that manner.

The streams emptying into Tulare lake are full of fine perch, and the farmers are packing them in large quantities, salting them down in barrels. Two men with hay forks and gum boots walk out into the shoal channels, which seems literally alive with fish, and selecting the largest as they pass up, pitch them out, loading a wagon in an hour's time.
