RUSSIA'S GOOD WILL.

Why Her Fleet Remained in Our Waters

It will be remembered that early in the rebellion a Russian fleet lay for several months in our harbor, and that other Russian men-of-war were stationed at San Francisco. Admiral Farragut lived at the Astor House, where he was frequently visited by the Russian Admiral, between whom, when they were young officers serving when they were young officers serving in the Mediterranean, a warm friendship had grown up. Sitting in my room one day after dinner, Admiral Farragut said to his Russian friend: "Why are you spending the winter here in idleness?" "I am here," re-pled the Russian Admiral, "under sealed orders, to be broken only on a contingency that has not yet oc-cured." He added that other Rus-sian war vessels were lying off San Francisco with similar orders. During this conversation the Russian Admiral admitted that he had admitted that he had received orders to break the seals, if during the rebellion we became involved in a war with foreign natious. Strict confidence was then enjoined. When in Washington, a few days later, Secretary Seward informed me that he had asked the Russian minister why his government kept their ships of war so long in our harbors, who, while in answering he diswho, while in answering he dis-claimed any knowledge of the nature of their visit, felt at liberty to say that it had no unfriendly purpose. "Louis Napoleon had invited Rus-sia, as he did England, to unite with him in demanding the breaking of him in demanding the breaking of our blockade. The Russian Embas sador at London informed his gov-ernment that England was preparing for war with America, on account of the seizure of Mason and Slidell. Hence two fleets were sent across the Atlantic under sealed orders, so that if their services were not needed the intentions of the emperor would remain, as they have to this day, secret. It is certain, however, that when our government and union were imperiled by a formidable rebellion, we should have found a powerful allay in Russia, had an emergency occurred." The latter revelation is corroborated by a well-known New York gentleman, who was in St. Petersburg when the rebellion began, and who, during an unofficial call upon Prince Gortschakoff, was shown by the chan-cellor an order written in Alexander's own hand, directing his Admiral to report to President Lincoln for orders, in case England or France sided with the confederates.—Thurlow Weed's Memories.

Mrs. Phoebe Rice, 1208 Madison street, a sister of Hon. H. Clay Sex-ton, Chief St. Louis Fire Depart, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, had been a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism for seven years; the mus-cles of her hands and limbs were cortracted and she used crutches. By a single application of St. Jacobs Oil she was benefitted instantaneously, and finally completely cured.

Into my life three years ago
She came and took a place
None else could fill. Her step was slow
And full of gentlest grace.

Beneath the ash they laid her; I have not smiled since that Sad day that death betrayed her, My own dear—passy cat.
