

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON:

TUESDAY, JUNE 17, 1884. EVERY MAN'S WANTS.

ONE wants women to vote, another wants prohibition, yet another protection, another free trade; one wants railroads regulated, another telegraph. One wants a postal telegraph to belong to the postoffice department of the United States government, another don't. We all want our own pet measure and our own candidate. One child wants the moon, another the stars. We all want a half loaf. If we can't get it shall we have no bread? Of course, my friend, what you want is highly important. You have abundant good reasons for desiring it. But life should have taught us all that we are not likely to get all we want just yet. What is the next best thing to do? Our method has been to get with the hand of men who come nearest to us in their wants. If we can substantially agree upon a few of the most important wants of mankind we will act together to acquire them. The first thing we want is liberty. The man who believes that slavery is a good thing cannot come in with us. The reason is, all our faculties were given for use, and we want to see all men free to use them. We want education for all, that they may know the best way to develop and cultivate all their powers and faculties. Next, after liberty, we want all men to take an interest in their fellow man. To get them steady work at good wages, to encourage them in temperate, industrious and economical habits. Then, to get them to think for themselves, to take no man's word for anything except he relates a fact. To let him draw no conclusion for you, only to let him help you to draw it for yourself. That man does you the best service who compels you to think for yourself. He puts you to sleep, and to a large extent kills you mentally when he thinks for you. Whoever thinks most is greatest, then who say not quite. Thinking tends to get you right when you think. Enough to reach the right and cling to that, then you become good as well as great. Then you think well and act right, that is wisdom, that is the great thing. Right thinking and right acting come from right choice of thought and action. Think right of God, the source and ideal of all that is right, then of man the chief object of all earthly action, yourself included, and you will have made a good start. You will then come into perfect harmony with the eternal vanities. You will have no contest with divine law, no right human law. By that time you will learn that love is the fulfilling of the law, all law divine human. Then you are ready for the golden rule, and the second table of the divine law. "Love thy neighbor as thyself." "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." This is good religion and good politics. Join with all right minded men to put into action in the various circles of government all that is possible. If none of you get all you want done, get all you can.

AN official statement shows that the total land area of the United States, not including Alaska, is 1,900,800,000 acres, and according to the last census 536,081,835 acres were in farms. A large amount, comprising at least 300,000,000 acres, is worthless either for culture or for timber, so that the amount of public lands available for settlement is really about 973,950,000 acres. Recent sales have reduced it to about 967,000,000 acres. It will promote the prosperity of the nation if the whole of this land is reserved for actual settlers. The average area of the 4,008,907 farms of the Republic in 1880 was 133 acres each, and the proper division of what remains of the public domain would add about 8,000,000 to the total number of farms.

TWENTY-EIGHT years ago to-day, the first national convention of the present Republican party met at Philadelphia, and nominated Jno C. Fremont, of California, for president, and Wm J. Dayton, of New Jersey, for vice-president. The Democratic national convention had met at Cincinnati, June 2, and nominated Jas. Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, and Jno. C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, who were elected the following November.
