Between here and Saddle Mountain lies a piece of country that offers a good many advantages to a party who propose to take a couple of weeks from the busy year and to make rod and gun supply the provender for that space of time, and such glorious days as the present strongly suggests the propriety of leaving the planks for the clastic turf beneath the feet and exchanging the usual avocations of the day for the oar and rifle, the zest of appetite that camping brings and the refreshing sleep that absence of care insures.

There is a strip of sand running from opposite Garibaldi, Tillamook county, to Cape Meares, that has all the attributes necessary to make a desirable senside resort. Not the least among its attractions is its industries. On one side rolls the is its isolation. On one side rolls the ocean, and all day long the trample of the surf apon the sand; on the other the placid bey of 'fillamook, and down the point dairy farms rich in requirements for a vernal feast. Just now it is not 'finshionable.' As soon as a great four "fashionable." As soon as a great four square house is built and "improve-ments" are made, and it is duly advertised as a "resort," it will have lost its chiefest charm. At present the A. B. Field affords excellent means of arriving and departing, and few places on the coast offer superior inducements to a cruping party of half a dozen or so who don't want to see a paper nor hear a word of "news" for a fortnight.

The New Northwest publishes the result of the vote on woman suffrage on the 2d inst. The proposed amendment received between 12,000 and 13,000 votes, with about 25,000 against it. Clatsop is the only county that gave it a majority.

The steamer Gypsy, which left here is thursday crossed the Yaqaina bar in safety Friday night, and crossed out again Saturday morning. As the Gypsy draws nearly ten feet of water the importance of the golden rule in this afternoon of the century. It is a counterfeit maxim, but it passes current, and is rarely refused in making the small change of the day. The fact that precept fand practice are at open war makes the true coin somewhat scarce, though its presence is in direct proportion to its demand.

It is so easy to preach and so hard to grave me the world is so full of cood. "Do as you are done by," seems to be the accepted version of the golden rule in this afternoon of the century. It is a

It is so easy to preach and so hard to practice, and the world is so full of good advice now, that it seems like covert hypocrisy to air that golden standard of action, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." This that others should do unto you." This is indeed the Christian law, and yet is there not in this very injunction a certain measure of implied selfishness? We are told, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and right in this precept is set up the idea that your love for your neighbor must be measured by the standard of your own love for yourself. According to this, a man that does not love himself can not love his neighbor, and the logical conclusion is that a certain amount of selfishness is necessary as a starter in the scheme of fraternity and Christian conduct. It is not the intention to follow this out—simply to indicate the argument and leave it at that.

"Feed a cold and starve a fever," said a friend yesterday, as he dropped into a chair and coughed spasmodically, after a hearty luncheon, eaten in accordance with his proverb. But isn't that proverb or maxim a trifle misleading? Colds are so common in Astoria that the question becomes an important one. Isn't it just possible that musty old maxim about feeding colds and starving fevers has been somewhat shortened in its descent and made to mean exactly contrary to its true intent. The true state of the hy-and made to mean exactly contrary to its true intent. The true state of the hygienic case would be more fittingly represented were it to read this way: "If you feed a cold you will have a fever to starve," and any one that has ever tried to get rid of a cold by stuffing himself will bear us out in the supposition.

There is another proverb that forms the mistaken basis for a good many sermons. It is that one which says, "Charity covereth a multitude of sins." There is no doubt that charity should cover a multitude of sins, but it is evident that the original intent of the proverb is perveried. If it be understood that no matter what the private peccadilloes of the wish, Miss Ellen Coursen, the famous soprano, whose praises have been sounded by the California press, has consented to give a musical entertainment in this city at Occidental hall, on Monday evening, the 30th inst. She will be assisted by her sister, Miss Rose Coursen, who is possessed of an exquisite contralto voice, and a choral union consisting of our best local talent. The event will be a musical treat, it being the intention to render the finest music ever heard in Astoria. The fact that at all the great festivals and meetings in San Francisco Miss Coursen that all the great festivals and meetings in San Francisco Miss Coursen that way and if he only work the thing right can have a handsome sum to his credit on the right side of the account. The idea seems to come down from the days when a man could sink a ship and crew and with a part of the swag that he obtained by wholesale murder could square things by bestowing arges on his favorite creed. It would seem as though a more reasonable definition of the saying would make it mean that we should all of us be leniant with the faults or imperfections of those we love, and that a proper spirit of Christian charity should impel us to bear with one another's infirmities and bodily weaknesses. The meaning is more tersely expressed in the attendant aphorism—"Love is blind."

"Do they not grow thicker on woodenbottomed vessels than on iron?"

"Yes; but they are not so thick on copper-bottoms, and that is one of the chief objects in having a vessel copper-bottomed. The barnacles do not like the poisonous nature of the copper and do not begin to cling to it until it has been partially neutralized by the action of the salt water. Iron ships cannot, of course, have copper bottoms, as the expense would be teo great in making a solid bottom of copper, and there is no satisfactory way of attaching the sheeting. To partially obviste the tendency of barnacles to collect on iron vessels, a strong solution of verdigris is now mixed with other ingredients and used on the bottom below the red water-line, and for this reason all the lower outside surface of this company now have a green color, such as you now see they are putting on the under side of the New York stem."

The reporter watched the process of scraping and observed that as fast as a large section of the barnicle-covered surface was cleaned and the red iron rust was made visible underneath, it was washed clean by another set of men, who were followed by the painters, with pots of a steaming mixture from furnaces along the ship?s side. Over each of these furnaces was a tank filled with a green liquid that bubbled and hissed and sent forth an odor which one could not but consider poisonous from the nature of the compound whence it issued.

A HEAVY EXPENSE.

"How long does it take for a gang of workmen like this to remove the bar-nacles from a ship?" asked the reporter. "About two days" Sometimes they put on as many men as can work conveniently on a vessel's bottom. You see the idea is to save expense. It costs a vessel from $600 to $1000 a day, according to her tonnage, to lie on this dock, and the men who do the work on this steamer are furnished by the Mail company. furnished by the Mail company and are instructed to push the job as fast as possible. It would cost the company as much dockage each day if only two men were employed in cleaning a bottom as it would if there were 190 at work."

"Does the green mixture that they are now applying act as a preventive against the accumulation of the barnacles?"
"Only in a measure. It requires but a "Only in a measure. It requires but a few months for the salt water to dissolve it and eat into the iron and form rough rusty places, where the little clingers gather and grow. They spread very fast and to a considerable depth when a vessel is lying still for an extended period, but often on the trip to China and returning a vast number will spread themselves all over a steamer's bottom. It is something of a water how there observed selves all over a steamer's bottom. It is something of a mystery how they collect so easily when a vessel is in motion."

"Are there not other and effectual means for preventing their presence?"

"There may be," was the reply, "but they have not yet been discovered. A thousand different preparations have been tried, but none of them are of much account, if we except the vardigris compound, and that is far from satisfactory. A fortune awaits the lucky man who can discover a comparatively inexpensive and A fortune awaits the nexy man who can discover a comparatively inexpensive and at the same time durable mixture, which, when applied to a ship's bottom, will render it so distasteful a place of residence to these barnacles that they will no longer infest it."—S. TIDE LANDS AND THEIR TITLES.

EDITOR ANTORIAN:-The title to the tide lands of this city and state are perplexing the rightful owners and the courts of this state to a degree that will involve every separate piece in litigation, long continued annoyance and expense, and in many instance in downright robbery. The question who are the rightful riparian owners of tide lands where the United States are and were the primary owners of the shore lands has not been as yet settled sufficient to make any precedent. The tide lands of the old Atlantic states never originally belonged to the government. In the new states the primary ownership In the new states the primary ownership of the land, was as follows: Florida, Spain; Louisiana, France; Texas and California. Mexico, and it has been Oregon's misfortune to be the first state to have to settle who are the rightful owners of the tide lands of this state under the laws of the United States. Fish Wheels.

ASTORIAN.

The Dalles Mountaineer says: "In the ast two or three years wheels for catching salmon have been multiplied in almost every available place on the Columbia river. At the Cascades they are in bia river. At the Cascades they are in operation in almost every eddy, and the number of the silvery tribe drawn in is astonishing. Sometimes the baskets manage to capture a sturgeon of enormous size, and it is with difficulty he is hauled out. To tourists these wheels furnish a constant attraction, and at every stopping place of the train the opportunity is embraced of visiting these modern devices for capturing the finny tribe. Above this city are two or three in operation, and we understand they average large quantities of salmon every day."
