About three o'clock came a lull, and then the single sentence "Cleveland nominated on second ballot." As quick as half a dozen men could put it in type and on the press The Assonax had type and on the press The Assonax had the street containing the analysis of the street containing the analysis of the street containing the analysis of the floodgates of gossip bors', young John was sent for to do the fiddling. His music was captivating and fiddling. His music was captivating and findly it got to that point where the girls said they wouldn't dance if John Alexander Logan didn't fiddle. One night there was a dance for a prize—a barrel of apple jack—to the man who could dance tongest. Young Logan fiddled until each man contestant had retired to his corner.

seasick?" an attack of 'Oh, my' a short time ago. reason for this, however, is found in the heave Jonah he stands not upon cere-mony, but at once proceeds to divest himself of all the surplus bile which his shore-tainted stomach affords, and, if very sick, will request the officer in charge to allow him to retire to his bunk. A few hours will usually restore him to his normal condition. I know a captain who runs a steamer between this port and China who never makes a trip without getting more or less seasick. He, how-ever, frankly confesses his weakness, and the captain is doubtless as good a navi-gator as any who sail on the Pacific

"How are the passengers about 'tipping the waiters?" "Well, every person who travels first class is expected to fee his waiter, al-though the matter is left entirely to his volition. Some people give smal amounts, some give liberally and other will under no circumstances donate a cent. Estimating the value of a prospective fee is where we waiters exhibit our best judgment of human nature. Now, I can stand and watch the people going up the gang-plank and guess within a very small fraction of how much each person will pay for the attentions of a waiter on the trip. One I might place at $1, another fifty cents, another at $2.50, another at $5, etc. You may be sure that I wouldn't miss on the general aggregate 3 per cent on the dollar."

"Well, until I got to studying this bus iness, I never thought there was such a vast difference in the liberality of people from different countries. The first on from different countries. The first on the list of free givers are western Americans; among them I include foreign born Pacific coasters, though the native born rank as the most liberal people in the world. The Boston and other eastern tourists are mean in their regard for services rendered. They act consequential and order the waiter around with pompous grandeur, but haggle over a quarter as though it bloke their hearts to part with it. They are really too mean to get seasick. An Eng lishman will search through the too mean to get seasick. An Eng lishmen will search through the ship to find and fee his waiter-but 25 or 25 or 50 cents is as much as one of them generally gives. The Mex-icans and South Americans are generally liberal, but the Scotch and Russians generally penurious. Passengers who hall from the Latin countries of Europe are never expected to give a cent. Now hail from the Latin countries of Europe are never expected to give a cent. Now I'll give you another surprise. The Chi-nese cabin passengers are almost as good patrons of the expectant waiter as any class of people who travel. I only speak of those traveling first class, comprising merchants and other wealthy Chinamen. Each waiter has six staterooms to take care of, and a waiter rejoices to see a Chinaman among the list of guests in his section of rooms."

the matter I put them up for sale at the "tip auction," held daily in the steward's room down stairs."

"The 'tip auction'? What is that?"

"Well, the auction results from lack of confidence held by the owner of a prospective fee to be obtained at the end of the voyage. The seller is privileged to make the first bid, after which he is compelled to accept the highest bidder above his starting price. I have by judicious buying and selling made twice the amount which the trip would otherwise have netted me. The seller does the collecting, and it is funny to see the disgusted expression on the face of the fellow who has sold short on a good customer, and has to turn over $2 or $4 to his comrade who bought the prospect for 50 cents. Not long ago a little darkey sold what he considered a stingy old Frenchman for 15 cents; you can imagine his chagrin when on arrival at Portland the aged Gaul handed him $5 in silver."
