ASTORIA, OREGON:

FOLLY ON ICE.

Let the pole rest. The pathways leading to its supposititious site are strewn with bones. Sorrow lies enshrined around its graves. Treasure and toil have been wasted in the fruitless effort to solve a problem which when solved might be of little practical value.

No president of the United States has ever worn only a mustache during his tenure of office. From Washington down to Lincoln all had smooth faces with the exception of a few who wore semi-side-whiskers.

An old gentleman of Wilkes, Ga., has in his possession an old Tippecanoe (1840) hat with a log cabin on one side, and hatters who are now on the outlook for novelties might find the idea valuable.

The campaign mathematician has arrived. After sitting for several weeks with a vinegar towel round his head he has proved to his own satisfaction, by mathematical formula, that Cleveland and Hendricks are the chosen men.

It is said that restless eyes which cannot look a person steadily in the face denote a deceitful, designing mind, while gray eyes signify dignity, intelligence, and excellent reasoning faculties.

EACH party is now assiduously asserting that the country will go to destruction without it. Perhaps it will be just as well for the people to wait a little while before they begin to worry.

A new variety of potato bug has appeared in Minnesota, and political agitators are accusing both the presidential candidates of being the direct cause of the unwelcome visitor.

DR. HAMMOND thinks a man or woman should have experienced emotion before either of them is able to write a novel. What a novel John Kelly could write.

THE political orator will soon begin to "point with pride" and "view with alarm." But he really don't mean all he says.
