"THE ALCALDE."

A Functionary of the Early West, and

The first Alcalde of Nevada City as elected by a voting population of 250, but in many camps ten or a doz-en men chose this peculiar and allpowerful officer, giving him all the powers granted under the Mexican and early Spanish system. He be-came the judge of the village, the petty lord of the tented town, and only the voice of the people could cles and great energy, who had spent his boyhood in placer mining in Sis-kyiou, in cattle-raising on the Eastern Oregon uplands, and in Indion fight ing and wild prospecting tours along the frontiers of British Columbia. When the war broke out he rode for Missouri, crossed the lines, joined a Virginia regiment and came back so crippled and battered that the old free, careless life was impossible. Always a great reader and a close student, he turned to the school room and won a reputation over three counties as a successful teacher. Un-der these circumstances he was called to take charge of what was, with undoubted justice, called the worst school in Northern California. The trustee had written to him at his cabin, perched on a pine-clad height of the Sierra, trout streams within a stone's throw, grouse in the woods, and deer and bear, his gun and rod, his "Marcus Aurelius" and "Noctes Ambrosiana" on the shelf within reach. He saddled his horse, and rising at daybreak, reached the village, once a mining camp, before 9 o'clock. When school was called to order he found that efficient work demanded a reclassification, for the pre-To SMOKERS of Blackwell's vious teacher had tried to gain cheap favor by advancing grades and skip-ping the hard places, and had come to grief by begging a large boy not to smoke a cigarette in school. The playful lads ducked him in the adja-cent stream This Special Deposit is to guarantee the payment of the 25 premiums fully described in our former announcements.
