BLUFF BEN'S MILLIONS.

SEPTEMBER 4, 188

IT now looks as though General Butler's private fortune, the way it was rational judgment upon them. In Salurday, Sept. 13, at 2 P. M. acquired and the uses to which it is fact, it is with many a matter, not of put, are to form an interesting chap- reason, but of sentiment. ter in the intricate campaign now before the country. It is claimed that the sturdy old general has a million friends among the workingmen. but that he also has myriads of enemies in the ranks of those better provided with this world's goods. They are of the opinion that because the hero of New Orleans has something which is the result of the toil of the but those acquainted with the seamy side of life look up to him as the exponent of their principles; as the crystalized demand for better wages and shorter hours of toil and the government purely popular. Moses that is to lead them out of the wilderness of deprivation and penury which now surrounds them. They harsh measures, and yet many belargest mills in the world has not insured a bed of roses for his employes.

Born in a little village in New Engstruggle with extreme poverty, young Ben's outlook was anything but pleasant. When young, if he was given a cent to celebrate the great and glorious Fourth, he was about as happy a vonngster as ever lived. Later on his brothers clubbed together and sent the youngster to Waterville. Maine, from which he graduated in He left his Alma Mater "a youth of keen vision, fiery, inquisiyears was one of the bright lights of the profession, not only in New England but throught the country. The general often recalls the day when he hung out his shingle and proclaimed himself ready to do battle for justice and right. On that morning it is said that his treasure box contained exactly $2.6216, but he was brimming over with grim determinathe reputation, which he still retains, that in fertility of expedients and devices to obtain an acquittal of his client he has seldom, if ever, been equaled. When a mountain stopped his path he did not go round it; he dug through it and battered and hammered it until he forced a path active part in politics, and was a delegate to the national convention which was held in Charleston in 1860, and adjourned to Baltimore where it separated into two bodies-Butler supported Breckinridge for the presidency in November, 1860, and thus made himself so unpopular in the North that he received only 6,000 votes as candidate for governor of Massachusetts, in that year. On the breaking out of the civil war, in 1861, he took command of a brigade and hurried on to Washington. He commanded the land forces of the expedition which took Fort Hatteras, North Carolina, in August, 1861. In 1862 he was made commander of the Department of the Gulf, and by stern and vigorous measures he reduced New Orleans to order and by his wise and strict sanitary regulations preserved it from yellow fever in the summer of that year.

James Parton says that General Butler while in command of the city, to obtain funds for the support of the poor, exacted money from the rich. His old antagonist, the late Congressman James Brooks, on the floor of the House told another version of the affair and charged General Butler with using the money thus obtained for his personal speculations in cotton and which were the stepping-stone to his present vast weaith. It has often been said that he was associated with his brother in these speculations. It must not be understood that General the trout, for it confines itself to Butler was accused of appropriating feeding on their spawn. One flock the money, but simply as speculating of wild ducks can easily destroy the with it, knowing that under the circular breeding prospect of any trout cumstances existing at the time he could not possibly lose. Several years later his brother died, leaving the General a fortune of nearly $500,-000, and when the war closed he returned to Lowell with a financial standing that few generals in the army occupied. He went back to his first love, the law, and soon became interested in the manufacture of bunting, and he enjoys the distinction of turning out the first American flag made from American products. Prior to that the English manufac-turers had the "call," but since then General Butler has had a monopoly of the business.

The managers of dime museums in various parts of the country are exhibiting sections of the north pole exhibiting sections of the north pole which they claim were chipped off by the Greely party. Thus it appears that fraud is not confined exclusively to politics.

THE United States is the greatest country for brass bands in the world, but it needs them all. A country that elects a president every four years VOTING AND FIGHTING.

Some advocates of woman suffrage have ridiculed the idea of any connection between voting and the capa city to fight. Their attitude in this matter would seem to show the absence of reflection on questions of government or the inability to form

The human race consists of two equal parts, the combatant and the non-combatant; and these parts are separated by the line of sex. It is true that some men are permanently disabled from fighting, and others may be disabled in one year or one month, and fit to bear arms in the next; but the general fact remains that men are the like $2,000,000 in his coffers, most of fighting half of humanity, and women are not. Fundamental laws are made thousand hands in the mill property in reference to aggregates of persons, owned by him at Lowell, Mass., he is and not to individual exceptions; and not and cannot be a friend of the it would be absurd to exact a surlaboring people of the country. His geon's certificate of military compe rich friends say that the general is tency from every voter at the polls assuming a virtue that he has not; It is enough that he belongs to a body which, as a whole, can and will fight. The question remains, What has this to do with voting? It has a good deal to do with it, and above all in a Since history began, no govern ment ever sustained itself long, un less it could command the physical call aloud for his protection from force of the nation; and this, whether the form of government was despot lieve that the general's career as a ism, constitutional monarchy, or de powerful director in some of the mocracy. The despot controls the army which compels the people to obey: the king and parliament control the force of the kingdom, and land, bereft of his father when a the malcontents dare not rise in inbabe and his mother enfeebled by a surrection till they think they have drawn away an equal or greater share of it. Finally, the majority in a republic feels secure that its enactments will take effect, because the defeated minority, even if it does not respect law, will respect a force greater than its own. But suppose the majority to consist chiefly of women. Then legality would be on one side and power on the other. The majority would have the law, and the minority tive and fearless." He was admitted the courage and strength. Hence, in to the bar in 1840 and for twenty times of political excitement, when passions were roused, and great in terests were at stake, the majority, that is, the legal authority,-would need the help of a standing army. Without such support, the possession of the suffrage by the non-combatant half of the nation would greatly increase the chances of civil discord. Once in our history, a minority rose against the majority in the belief that tion to succeed. He soon acquired it could outfight it. This would happen often, if the minority, as in the supposed case of woman suffrage, had not only the belief, but the certainty that it could master the majority. It may not be creditable to human nature that, if we would have a stable government, it is necessary to keep the balance of power on the side of through it. He early took an the law; but the business of the government is to shape itself to the actual, and not the ideal or millenial dition of mankind

Suppose again, a foreign war in which the sympathies of our women were enlisted on one side or the other. Suppose them to vote against the judgment of the men that we should take part in it; or in other words, that their male fellow-citizens should fight whether they liked it or not. Would the men be likely to Forty years ago no man with a moustache could have been elected president of the United States. In those days the moustache was considered undignified if not immoral, and a man who sported one was looked upon with suspicion. It was a badge of the adventurer, gambler and the rake in the estimation of many good people. Less than thirty years ago a great party attempted to elect a man president who only parted his hair in the middle; but Fremont was defeated, and no imitator of his style has since aspired to high office.

An eccentric saloon keeper in New York has glasses with the portraits of Blaine, Cleveland and Butler engraved thereon. He reports the Butler men outnumber the other drinkers. There are no St. John glasses on the premises.

THE wild duck is considered the most destructive of all enemies of stream in a short time.
