TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

WHEN CONGRESS ELECTS.

Strictly speaking, Congress relates to the senate and the house of representatives, and therefore congress never elects a president. The constitution requires that one person shall receive a clear majority of all the presidential electors elected. In case there should be but two candidates and a tie between them, which is not an impossibility, or in case there should be more than two candidates, as there are this year, and no one of them all shall receive a majority of all the electoral votes, which majority is 201, or over, then the election in November will fail to elect a president and will go to the house of representatives for its decision. The mode of election by the house is peculiar. Each state has one vote and no state more than one vote. This one vote is cast by the majority of the representatives from the state. If the representation from any state is equally divided and cannot agree upon any one candidate by a majority of its representatives, then the vote of such state is lost. A majority of all the states is required to elect in the house. Should no candidate receive a majority of all the states in this house mode of election, then the election fails, and the president of the senate, under existing law, shall be president of the United States.

As now constituted the Democrats have a majority of the states in the house, and if the election should go to that body, beyond a doubt Cleveland would be elected, even if he should not have received more than the 153 electors of the southern states in November, against 200 for Blaine and the other forty-eight divided between Butler and St. John. The chief points to be borne in mind are these: First, that no man can be elected in November at the polls unless he shall receive a majority of all the electors, All the electors number 401 and a majority is 201, or over. Second, that when the election goes to the house the voting is by states, each state having one vote and no more, which vote is cast by the majority of the representatives from each state. The majority of the representatives from Ohio are Democrats and the one vote of that state would go for Cleveland and Hendricks in the house, though Blaine and Logan should have carried Ohio in November by 24,000. The majority of the representatives of New York are also Democrats, and Cleveland Hendricks would get the one vote of that state, notwithstanding that Blaine and Logan might have received 100,000 the most votes at the November election. The law requires that the electors elected in November shall meet in a college in each state on the first Monday in December, following the November election, and cast and certify and forward their ballotings and the result to the president of the senate; and that, on the third Wednesday in February, the president of the senate shall open these certificates, and in the presence of the senate and the house the votes shall be counted. If the counting shall result in not giving any of the candidates voted for in November a majority of the electors, then the election goes to the house, where it is conducted as above described.

If the house fails to elect—that is if no one candidate receives in the house a majority of all the states—which is now twenty (there being thirty-eight states), then the president of the senate shall become president of the United States, and if there is no president of the senate, from any cause, then the speaker of the house becomes president of the United States, in which latter contingency Mr. Carlisle, the free-trader, would be the man, for the whole business of making a president must be concluded before the 4th of March, when the present house of representatievs goes out.

It is apparent from all this that if the Republicans fail to give Blaine and Logan at least 201 of the electors to be elected in November, though Butler may get fifty and Cleveland no more than the 153 of the southern states, Blaine has no chance and Cleveland will surely be the next president by action of the Democratic house.

The London Times is engaged in a curious crusade against prohibition. Wearers of the blue ribbon, it says, are in the main persons of inferior physical development; and, if we may judge by their facial expression, are not remarkable for intellectual power. Our civilization produces an abundant undergrowth of feeble bodies and lop-sided minds, people whose individual insignificance becomes less oppressive to them when they fancy themselves members of a great organization. Their vanity is flattered by the idea that they can set an example of superiority to others. These are the people who become anti-vaccinators, anti-vivisectionists, or teetotalers, or all three. As a rule they are persons who do not require alcohol, sometimes because a strong digestion enables them to take up sufficient nutriment in other forms, and sometimes "because their capacity for exerting force is so limited that they are compelled to be careful in consuming the materials by which it is supplied."

A free application of soft soap to a fresh burn almost instantly removes the fire from the flesh. If the injury is very severe, as soon as the pain ceases apply linseed oil and then dust over with fine flour. When this covering dries hard repeat the oil and fine flour dressing till a good coating is obtained. When the latter dries allow it to stand until it cracks and falls off, as it will do in a day or two, and a new skin will be found to have formed where the skin was burned.

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.
For Pulmonary Troubles—T. J. McFALL, M. D., Anderson, S. C., says: "I consider Scott's Emulsion one of the best preparations in the market for Pulmonary Troubles. I have used it in my practice since 1876, and am well satisfied with it."

AN IMPERIAL MONSTER.

Voltaire, in his "Philosophical Dictionary," says that Peter was "half-hero and half-tiger.', Half-hog and half-tiger would be nearer the truth. Macaulay declares that "to the end of his life he lived in his palace like a hog in a sty, and when he was entertained by other sovereigns, never failed to leave on their tapestried walls and state beds unequivocal signs thata savage had been there." He was naturally swinish in his tastes and habits, and displayed his swinishness regardless of circumstances or consequences. When William III visited him in London, the air of the room was so foul that a window had to be opened before the English king could enter. The nastiness of himself and suite almost ruined Evelyn's villa at Deptford, where the imperial party were lodged; and the owner applied for and received compensation from parliament. Twenty years later the pretty little "Montijou" palace in Berlin suffered in the same way from the same party. The sprightly Margravine of Beireuth says that "the desolation of Jerusalem was everywhere in it and it was so ruined as almost to need rebuilding." Every one has heard of the important part played by the cane in the domestic economy of Frederic William I of Prussia, but that eccentric monarch was nothing in comparison to his Russian brother in the caning line. Peter, when the fit was on him, literally caned everybody—from his cook to his counselor, from the meanest peasant to the highest noble—sparing neither age nor sex. He would get up from the table and flog the host who was unlucky enough to entertain him. He would stand at the door of the senate-house and flog each senator that went in. Lefort was an intimate and trusted friend, yet on slight provocation he was knocked down and brutally kicked by his imperial guest. But all this flogging was in the way of recreation. When Peter "meant business" it was a more serious matter. Incredible as it may seem, it is nevertheless well authenticated that one of his own sisters—it is said, more than one—received a hundred strokes of the whip on her back in the presence of the whole court. In 1713 Alexis, his only son who outlived infancy, was for some offense of no great seriousness, several times tortured in the presence of the diabolical father, and a few hours later died—either from the effects of the torture or by assassination. For sympathizing with Alexis, the Princess Golitsyn, the bosom companion of the Empress Catherine, was publicly whipped by soldiers. For the same reason the brother of his first wife, Eudoxia—whom he had thrown into prison—was tortured, and then broken alive on the wheel. An alleged lover of Eudoxia was tortured in Peter's presence almost daily for six weeks—by the knout, by burning coals and red-hot irons, by being tied down to a plank full of sharp spikes, and finally impaled. Nothing ever told of Nero is more horribly grotesque than this.

Miss Hamilton was a fair but frail maid of honor to Catherine. After a casual intimacy with Peter she bestowed her tenderness elsewhere without interference on his part, but when to extricate herself from resulting embarrassments, she took to infanticide, he brought her to trial. Condemned to decapitation, she mounted the scaffold in a dress of white satin trimmed with bows of black ribbon, looking more lovely than ever. But not alone; Peter appeared at her side, and, straining her to his breast, lamented that the divine law forbade him to spare her. A moment after the beautiful head rolled from the block at his feet, and lifting it by the ear he imprinted a last kiss upon the quivering lips.

The Prussian Ambassador Prinz asserts in his official dispatches that during the memorable suppression of the Streltsi revolt Peter gave a banquet, sent for a score of rebels, and every time he drained a glass struck off a head, inviting the envoy to join in the sport. With such sins laid at his door it is scarcely worth while to mention lighter ones; to say that Peter was a glutton, a drunkard, addicted to every form of sensual indulgence, an irredeemable blackguard and ruffian, sparing no woman in his lust and no man in his wrath, utterly infamous in all the relations of life, a scoffer at virtue in either sex, a mocker of religion, dying five weeks after participating in the election and consecration of a burlesque pope. Yet this man, or monster rather, is paraded before the world as Peter the Great.

The Home Circle.

If father is cross, and mother scolds, and aunty has the blues, and the children feel good for nothing, home is not a very happy place. Indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, rheumatism, or liver complaint, will account for all these. They can all be cast out by the use of Brown's Iron Bitters, the great tonic and strengthener. Health brings happiness. Mrs. Rochester, 553, North Gay Street, Baltimore, says, "Brown's Iron Bitters quickly relieved me of indigestion and general debility."

Gen. Butler traveled 6,000 miles through sixteen states in seventeen days and made fifty-two speeches. It will be hard to dispute his claim to be considered a workingman on such a record.

James Buchanan is running for congress in New Jersey and Zachary Taylor is a candidate for a like position in Tennessee.
