The deep channel of over 109 fathoms which runs through the strait at its entranee from the ocean, is deflected to the south-ward, probably by the superior strength of the ebb tide and a southerly set of the off shore current. A zone of desp. watar During the summer of 1880 I was sta-tioned at Neah bay, and kept as accurate an account as I could of the season's catch; and my estimate for that sum-mer's fishing of the Makah tribe, gave a result of 1,586,900 pounds of fresh hali-but. The balibut taken by the Makabs are from the banks mentioned off the en-trance to Fuca Strait and a few miles along the shore eastward from Cape Flat-tery. Further up the strait the Clallam Indians take halibut on the banks off Clallam bay and Port Angeles, and the Italian fishermen of Vietoria and Port of the ebb tide and a southerly set of the off shore current. A zone of deep water of about three miles in width and 140 to 150 fathoms deep, extends in that direc-tion to the 48th parallel. Between it and the shore, a distance of shout eight miles, the depth decreases from 80 fathoms fine dark sand, to 67 and 39 fathoms in shore Halibut are taken wherever there are convenient soundings, but they abound convenient soundings, but they abound on the bank about the center of the en-trance to the strait just where the 125th degree of longitude and the parallel of 48° 30° intersect each other, and from Italian fishermen of Victoria and Port Italian Ishermen of Victoria and Port Townsend take quantities for the markets at these places. No regular statistical account has been kept at either place, but enough is known to prove that the trade in fresh halibut shipped in ice from Victoria to San Francisco and from Det Trade 10 for the france of the form 48° 30 intersect each other, and from that point all along the west coast of Vancouver Island. The best fishing ground for vessels is in the vicinity of Cape Scott on the northwest end of Vancouver Island and along the north shore, particularly Nawhiti bar in Goletas channel, which is a most prolific ground for halibut. But as that locality is in British Colum-Port Townsend to Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, is already a lucrative business, and an evidence that the supply is unlimited. The objection with many to canned halibut is, that it is too dry. But I have seen most excellent and Inscious canned halibut, to which a large spoonful of olive oil had been added to each can. I bia it is not my purpose to describe it as connected with the fishe ics of Puget connected with the fishe rise for Fuget Sound, but to show our fishermen that to them it is a forbidden ground. Several years ago an attempt was made to pro-cure halibut off Cape Flattery for the San Francisco market, but without suc-cess. The vessels obtained plenty of fish, but as they had no ice, their halibut mere ad much make in the San Franonve oil had been added to each can. I think if some of the canneries at Astoria would try the experiment of canning halibut, now that they can so readily ob tain a supply from off Cape Flattery, it will be found a success. I will allude to this business more particularly in a fu-ture paper.—Jas. G. Swan. Assistant U. S. Fish Commission, were not of much value in the San Fran

One of the disadvantages under which business men and persons who use the good prices, the voyage, from some cause was said not to have been a profitable one, and the business was abandoned. Since the Emily Sterens' time no other vessel has been engaged in fishing on the banks of Cape Flattery except occasional-is for maxime. A trackast will run off telephone labor is that while they may communicate with each other on matters of business, no record can be kept of transactions and many veratious mistakes are thus made. An invention, a patent for which has just been applied for, is designed to do away with this danger from mistakes, and at the same time keep a permanent record of all messages sent over the wires. The instrument is described by a writer in the Pall Mall

Such scoured planks and polished brass, and fancifully coiled and braided ropes as one sees on its decks, gives it the palm over any naval vessel that I have ever visited. Its commander, Captain Hooper, has had long experience in the revenue service and ranks as one of its finest officers. He LIGHT ranks as one of its intest oncers. He commanded the revenue cutter Corvein on its craise to the Arctic in 1881 in search of the Rogers and the Jeannette, and took with him Prof. John Muir, the X BBUR geologist, who was enabled on that cruise to continue his studies of the glaciation of Alaska and make other investigations in science. Brief and premature reports of special features of that cruise were made by the naval surgeon who accom-panied the expedition, but Captain Hoop-er's report, and Prof. Muir's exhaustive EAST GEN article on the geology and glaciation of Alaska will shortly be issued by the treasury department, accompanied by a full set of engravings.-Ruhamah in Port of Entry Times.

John Exon, of the Deep Sea fishing fishing company, has returned from the Sound. His last trip turned out unprofitably. He reports having made a splendid hand of fish after being out only two days, and was returning. But on nearing the Columbia river bar the wind began to blow a gale, so that they could not cross, and they had to put to sen again, and the weather continuing rough so long the fish were spoiled and had to be thrown overboard. They ran short of provisions and put into Paget sound. The Lottie will be left at Port Townsend, while the fishing tackle, nets, etc., will be shows of Astoria. She is entirely too light for rough weather. The company will build a staunch veset. Oregonian.
