THE DAY BEFORE ASSASSINATION.

Auother Chapter in the History of the Medec War.

Dr. Cabaniss furnishes us with another interesting article in connection with the Modoc war. This chapter rehearses incidents occurring at an interview with the Modoc chief on the day previous to the assassination of the peace commissioners, and conclusively shows that essassination had been decided on in the event of refusal to accede to the Indian demand.

On the west cape the penies were herded and guarded by Indians, who were visible to us daily as they kept watch.
To reach Mason's camp we had to pass the point of this cape and across the bay to the other upon which the soldiers were encamped. The Indian camp would be a nalf mile away to the south.

Extending a few yards from the shore lay sunken rocks, and many above water, which made the navigation itself dangerous; but the Modoc rifles made it the more so, if we should be made targets for them when in range. Both of these dangers would have been avoided by sceping from land, but the major, perhaps to try my nerves and Meacham's, steered close to the shore.

This was an imprudent act and might have cost us our lives but for the fact that Jack had told his people not to fire on the whites first. This I learned at the first interview from Jim. Several Indians

Having arrived at the camp of Colonel Mason, we received a cordual greeting from Colonel Bernard and others, and took dinner with them. Bernard commanded the troops who attacked the Indians on the 16th of January from the east side, this attack having been made the evening before the general assault on the 17th. When dinner was over we saw a party of four Indians prowling about the rocks between us and Jack's camp, and not far from the lake. Three hunthe department and public generally.

Sam Wynn, a boarding house runner for Jim Turk, was arrested yesterday by Constable Springer of Justice Redmond's court on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon. Wynn struck a sailor over the head, on the 8th of this month, with a heavy bar of lead. He went to Astoria until he thought the matter blown over and came back yesterday, Wynn strands a good change of going to inquired if he was the captain. After re-ceiving a negative reply the Indian asked permission to get water from the lake. He then told the colonel that he had to go to his camp and he would go to his. The four men then went toward the strong-hold and in a few minutes were joined by two others. Haying a great desire to visit the Indian camp that I might see what influence I had with Jack to pre-vent war as well as to be familiar with the position to report this to General Gil-lem in case we had to attack the Indians, I asked Colonel Mason's consent to do so, and accompanied by him as far as the four men then went toward the strongand accompanied by him as far as the picket started on my errand.

In a few minutes time I was near etough to call to the Indians, and two of them came to me Upon asking their names one said his name was Bock; the other Stone. It was evident that they were giving me fectitions names. They were giving me fictitious names. They were young men and spoke English im-perfectly. I told them to call the others, scar-faced Charlie and three others came to me. The former greeted me cordially and asked for crackers, as he was hun-gry. I had none and he then asked for

gry. I had none and he then asked for matches. Having a box of these I gave them to him. Said I, "Charlie, I would like to see Captain Jack." "All right' you go to his house with me."

Having reached the place where they had burned the brush each one picked up his rille which had been laid down. This occurrence was an incident which showed that the untutored Indian had some chivalry about him and proved $1,200.

chief stood with his back to a rock with his rifle in hand with his Lieutenant Shack-Nasty Jim near him, arrived also. Few words were spoken, as Jack seemed wrapped in thought and very dignified. His appearance on this occasion was in striking contrast to what it was when I first visited him as a surgeon whilst he was imprisoned at Fort Klamath and his limbs confined with irons previous to his trial and execution. A gull having alighted on the water near by Jack raised his gun and fired at the bird as it floated on the waves. He was followed by Jim. Both missed, though they made good shots. The bird escaped.

Jim turned to me and said: "The soldiers think me kill you." He was correct, for the report was heard at the camp and it was thought that I had been shot.

The place of meeting was one hundred yards from the cave. This on an elevated plateau and the Indians were building a stone wall around it. In a few minutes fifteen or twenty of the men came to us and among them was Bogus Charlie. Through him the talk was carried on between Jack and myself. Little was said by the others. They acted as men would who had made up their minds and arrived at a decision from which there was no appeal.

The occupation of the land; a few hundred acres on Lost river or Hot creek valley, was the demand made by them and upon the solution of this queston hung the lives of General Canby and many other valuable men. Could it have been possible to get the question of the punishment of the Modocs who had been indicted by the grand jury of Jackson county, Oregon, settled, it is my opinion that Captain Jack should have been allowed to live at Lost river, where he and his people were born and where the bones of his ancestors were buried He had up to the time (Nov. 29th, 1873) when he was attacked by the soldiers, borne a good character and was respected by the settlers as a man of honesty and 4ruth. Meacham has shown in his Wigwam and Warpath that Jack did not want to go to war, and I was told by General Wheaten that a few days of text the Sold in Janu. demand.

It was in this craft that the writer conveyed Mr. Meacham from the camp of Gen. Gillem when he had recovered sufficiently from the wounds given him by Schonchin and Jim on the day Gen. Canby was shot, to the mouth of Lost river, when his wife had come to meet him, escorted by a number of Oregon volunteers.

Col. Mason was awaiting the time when the movements against the Indians should be made, and to intimidate the Modoos. But they did "intimidate," as the next day proved. He was there also to operate with the troops who were to attack on the west side under Col. John Green, when a resort to arms was determined on.

After remaining an hour or more and urging Jack to make peace, Jack, Charley and another stripped themselves and crawled into a wick-i-up, which was covered by a blanket and carpet. Into this they put many stones which had been heated in a fire near by, and then commenced to sweat and give utterance to the most diabolical sounds. After remaining an hour or more and

All communication was had by this means (boat), as the Indians would not have allowed us to pass through their lines and stronghold.

On the west cape the regues were herd. make arrangements for the meeting on the morrow, which was to be the last day that Gen. Canby and Rev. Dr. Thomas would behold the sun.

My mission being ended, I returned to Mason camp, and thence to headquarters and reported what I had seen to Gen.

A LIVELY CAMPAIGN IN INDIANA.

The Soosiers Worked Up Regarding The Election

NEW YORK, Oct. 21 .- A Fort Wayne, Indiana, special dated the 20th, says. "The Republicans and the Democrats have rival parades to night. Trains have brought people as far as from Toledo Ohio. The streets are filled, and every third man has a fish-horn, industriously blowing to drown the noise of his rival. The maddest scenes in Ohio pale before the confusion of this evening at Fort Wayne. If the night should pass without a free fight between the marching communies it will be a wonder "

Indiana, says: "Blaine was howled down by a Democratic crowd in this town this afternoon, and denied the privtown this afternoon, and denied the privilege of speaking in the place assigned him by the Republican local committee. This seems to be the result of the plan devised by the Democrats to offset the effect of Blaine's visit. The county is strongly Democratic, with a majority easily of 4000. Ten days ago the Republicans prepared for Blaine's appearance. It was arranged that he should speak from the balcony of the Avelin house. Opposite this hotel is the open court house square. Two days ago the Democrats got up an opposition meeting, to be noise square. I wo days ago the Demo-erats got up an opposition meeting, to be held at the same time as the one adver-tised for Blaine, and they selected a spot forty feet distant from the Avelin house baleony. The Democrats advertised their meeting to be addressed by Hen-dricks and Senator Bayard, but they stid dricks and Senator Bayard, but they did not; their names were merely used to draw a crowd. Blaine was wholly unad-vised of the situation.

When Blaine entered the city he found the place wonderfully crowded. Twentyfive thousand persons were in the streets and along the line of march. The car-riages of the party were driven two miles where Blaine was to speak. When he came out on the balcony there were in front of him at least 1,000 Democrats. They had taken their position in advance of the arrival of the Republicans, and of the arrival of the Republicans, and were therefore masters of the situation. Blaine began to speak, when his appearance was greeted by a storm of yells and groans. He waited ten minutes, during which he essayed to speak four times and each time he was yelled down. Then he consulted with the local committeemen. Blaine was very indignant at being placed opposite the Democratic meeting, but it was too late to mend it.

opposite the Democratic meeting, but it was too late to mend it.

"Well, let us see," said Blaine, "to whom the crowd belongs." He entered a carriage and was driven to an open space, eight blocks away. He was followed by a great majority of the crowd, not more than 1.200 remaining round the Democratic stand. Blaine stood upon the coachman's box and made a speech which was beard by 15,000. The excitement of was heard by 15,000. The excitement of the scene at the hotel had spurred him up so that he made one of the most spirited speeches of the canvass. He was received with a storm of cheers. His reception at Fort Wayne would have been the most brilliant of the day if the day if it had not been for the ho-tel episode. Along the line of his jour-ney from South Bend he had exception-ally large and enthusiastic crowds. At Elkhart he addressed 8,000; at Goshen 6,000, at Loronics and Kendalkrill, the Eakhart he addressed 8,000; at Goshen 6,000, at Legonier and Kendallville the same number, and at Auburn, his last stop, 10,000. In his talk to-day Blaine asked if they wanted to have the solid, free trade south secure the votes of New York and Indiana, so as to bring into power the section which had sought to destroy the government.

The best proof that this state has gone crazy upon the election is the fact that at all stops to-day there were long lines at all stops to-day there were long lines of young women, wearing campaign uniforms, marching with torches over their shoulders with the men. In some places, as at Kendallville, the young women were the beauties of the place. The general uniform is a white duck dress, trimmed and sashed with scarlet, with bands of red across the breast. The cap is jaunty and of red silk. These young women march and sing while their brothers shout. The city of Fort Wayne appears to have gone absolutely mad.
