SOCIALISTIC CONDITIONS.

FROM the writings and speeches of a certain class this fall it would appear as though there were a certain well-defined antagonism between those who have and those who have not, and that those who have are some way dealing unjustly with those who haven't. It is not to be denied that those who possess a little capital have advantage over those who do not, but it is an acquired and not an unfair one. It is just as easy for States Marshal Jones intends to ap those who have it not to acquire it if they but comply with the necessary

Take two men tilling the soil, one of whom uses his hands or stick, tended to arm them. He said, howwhile the other has a horse and a ever, that he would give half of them plough; two men in conflict with a to the Democrats. The Democratic wild animal, one of whom has only a committee threaten to make a demand stick or a stone, while the other has a that that party be given half of these repeating rifle; two men who are sick, marshals, and in case of refusal, to apone of whom can travel, command ply to the federal court for an order and water, while the other lacks all appointments. If the court refuse these things. This does not mean the request the Democrats say they that one man has an advantage will take measures for self-protecagainst the other, but that, when they tion, and as the city government is are rivals in the effort to get the Democratic, will ask for the appointmeans of subsistence from nature, ment of as many special police as the one who has capital has immeas- there are deputy marshals. the self-denial continues to be as great come a point at which further accuwon leisure which he can employ in winning secondary objects of necessary objects of necessity and advantage, and emancipated himself from things in life which are gross and belittling. The possession of capital is therefore an indispensable prerequisite of ease. This is not saying that .a man in the narrowest circumstances may not be a man "for a' that." It is saying that the extension and elevationed on that extension of civilizahas his self-denial before him, howsome occult source of inspiration, not from observing the facts of this world as it has been made and exists.

In a community where the standard of living is high, and the conditions of production are favorable, there is a wide margin within which an individual may practice self-denial and win capital without suffering, if he has not the charge of a family. That it requires energy, courage, perseverance, and prudence is not to be denied. Any one who believes that any good thing on this earth can be got without those virtues may believe in the philosopher's stone or the fountain of youth. If there were any Utopia, its inhabitants would certainly be very insipid and characterless.

Those who have neither capital nor land unquestionably have a closer class interest than landlords or capitalists. If one of those who are in either of the latter classes is a spendthrift he loses his advantage. If the non-capitalists increase their numbers, they surrender themselves into the hands of the landlords and capitalists. They compete with each other for food until they run up the rent of land, and they compete with each other for wages until they give of a class which saves nothing and with a pair of tweezers. marries early, the few prudent suffer for the folly of the rest, since they can only get current rates of wages; and if these are low, the margin out of which to make savings by special personal effort is narrow. No instance has yet been seen of a society composed of a class of great capitalists and a class of laborers who had fall en into a caste of permanent drudges. Probably no such thing is possible so long as landlords especially remain as a third class, and so long as society continues to develop strong classes of merchants, financiers, professional men, and other classes. If it were conceivable that non-capitalist laborers should give up struggling to become capitalists, should give way to vulgar enjoyments and passions, should recklessly increase their numbers, and should become a permanent caste, they might with some name has been adopted be some pro- resentatives.

essed labor leaders, but it really should be considered insulting. If there were such a proletariat it would be hopelessly in the hands of a body of plutocratic capitalists, and a society so organized would no doubt be far worse than a society composed of nobles and serfs, which is the worst society the world has seen in modern

> THE Seattle Post-Intelligencer has laid out a ticklish course for itself in upholding and endorsing Mr. Voorhees for Territorial delegate. It acknowledges that he made, an argument as an attorney favoring the railroad company, claiming and defending all that the Post-Intelligencer opposes and denies, but now it tries to satisfy itself with the idea that it was not as Chas. S. Voorhees he did that, but as a lawyer. The interesting question arises: Should Voorhees get to Washington would it be as a representative of the people, or "as a lawyer." Mr. Voorhees is on record as an opponent of the people Fried Oysters. - - - 25 cents in their fight against monopoly. He is on record as a paid defender and champion of the N. P. R. R. Co. Mr. Voorhees is a good man to be let stay at home. The people of Pacific county, of Wahkiakum county, of Chehalis and Cowlitz counties cannot afford to take any chances.
