

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1884

ISSUED EVERY MORNING (Monday excepted) J. F. HALLORAN & COMPANY, PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS, ASTORIA BUILDING, - - CASS STREET

Terms of Subscription. Served by Carrier, per week, 15c. Sent by Mail, per month, 45c. One year, $4.50. Free of postage to subscribers.

Advertisements inserted by the year at the rate of $2 per square per month. Transient advertising fifty cents per square, each insertion.

Notice to Advertisers. THE ASTORIAN guarantees to its advertisers the largest circulation of any newspaper published on the Columbia river.

The State sailed yesterday. East Portland dealers are offering eight cents a bushel for potatoes.

There will be no service in St. Mary's Roman Catholic church to-morrow. The Blaine and Logan club go to Westport on the Gold Dust this afternoon.

Col. Wm. H. Effinger will address the citizens of Astoria on the political issues of the day next Tuesday evening.

Hon. W. D. Fenton, Democratic candidate for elector, will speak here next Thursday night. Rufus Mallory will be here the next night.

There will be no skating at the rink next Tuesday and Thursday nights. Tonight will furnish good opportunity to those desirous of exercise.

There are 272 prisoners confined in the state penitentiary at the present time, the largest number since it has ever been imprisoned there at one time.

A pumpkin weighing 102 1/2 pounds sent from Grap's river and at A. V. Allen's store shows what can be done in the market of the wholesale manufacture of pumpkin pie.

It is said that the reason the Seattle Herald went under was because it could not collect what was due it from the business men of that city. Well, a newspaper is like any other business. It can't pay its debts or dues unless others pay it what they owe to it.

It would appear as though the railroad managers have made a mistake in putting the fare to the New Orleans exposition so high. At a lesser rate they would have ten from Oregon to the one that will pay the rate asked. Of course the answer is, "If you don't want to go you can stay at home," which does not admit of successful extradition, but the fare seems pretty steep all the same.

The party in charge of Assistant Otto Von Geldern have finished surveying off Fort Stevens. Since the survey of 1852 about 1,000 feet of bank has made north and east, and it is now found that the better location for a wharf would be to the eastward of the present one. As soon as the exact United States reserves in line is determined, the precise location of the proposed work will be known.

The social and dance at Liberty hall was well attended. The evening was a beautiful one; every one felt good; the supper was all that could be desired; the music was in accord; and between forty and fifty couples had "a real nice time."

The Astoria Ladies Coffee club has had no opportunity to exhibit its merit in furnishing refreshments at a fire, but as a popular social organization it is a success.

J. W. Crawford, assistant U. S. commissioner for Oregon, sent out over sixty circulars to that many newspapers in the state, asking them to send their papers to New Orleans during the Centennial or World's Fair, and asking them to respond, yes or no. Three have responded, all saying they would send their paper, the forty not having been heard from. Mr. Crawford will publish a list of the papers on December 1st, that editors may expect to find on file while attending the fair.

A party of firebugs seem to be engaged in a concerted effort to burn down Portland's docks. Half a dozen attempts have lately been made, and last Thursday night one of the miscreants was caught. Hasty examination, says the Oregonian, showed both hands saturated with the inflammable oil. They brought him to the city jail, where he was immediately recognized as Jimmy McGuire, a notorious vagrant, who has not done an hour's honest work since he came to town. He was carefully searched, and in one pocket was found a pint bottle, such as alcohol is usually sold in by druggists, with about two tablespoonfuls of kerosene remaining therein, the rest having evidently been poured on the wharves, in his pants and in his vest pocket, there were several pieces of small, dry cedar kindling, and two small bunches of matches. A handkerchief was found bound over each shoe at the heel. The handkerchiefs were folded so that there were several thicknesses under the heel, and their ends were tied at the instep. McGuire maintained sullen silence during the search.

The Scandinavian Blaine and Logan Club will hold a meeting at the Blaine and Logan Wigwam, on Monday evening, at 7:30 o'clock. Hon. C. W. Fenton will address the meeting, and other speakers will be in attendance. Those friendly to the cause, and as many others as can possibly attend are respectfully invited. By order AUG. DANIELSON, Secretary.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF EARTH.

A Sketch of the Eminent Centenarian, Sir Moses Montefiore.

But one in a million attain the age of a hundred years, and but one in a hundred million who has completed a century of existence in a manner worthy of notice beyond the fact of his great age.

The Hebrew throughout the world is now celebrating the hundredth birthday of one of the greatest men and purest philanthropists in the universe. A man who throughout a hundred years of a useful life has practically exemplified the Divine command, and has gone through the world doing to all men as he would that they should do unto him.

Such a man belongs to no race, or age, or nationality. The world claims him, and every man, whatever his faith, his language, or his nationality is the better for the life and labors of the eminent Jewish philanthropist who yesterday completed one hundred years of an extraordinary and useful career.

The world is my country; to do good is my religion," would seem to be the motto that this man has chosen and nobly has he lived up to it, and has always been the advocate of the first and most deathless principles of our common humanity.

In the town of Ramsgate, England, but also from it by wide fields of grain and clover, crossed by yellow lines of dusty road, on a green plain with a fine border of woods, stands East Cliff Lodge. Not many yards from its front windows the white chalk cliffs make sheer descent to where the sea daily grasps and relinquishes the sands beneath—the golden sands for which the beautiful beaches of South English shores are so famous.

It is a lovely and pleasantly solitary spot, enclosed in the walls so familiar as the boundaries of private estates in rural and suburban England.

Set in the side of a hillside, and thickly bordered in vines, is a rustic door to which one passes down into the subterranean grotto leading among curious shells and dark shrubberies from the center of the grounds to the sea. The walks through the garden and approaching the house are winding and richly shaded, and the murmur of the sea, mingling with the play of the wind in the leaves, makes a continuous flow of soothing melody around this hermitage, the house of one of the most charitable men who ever lived, and now one of the oldest among the living.

In this charming garden, many years ago, Sir Moses Montefiore, even then in the middle years of life, used to receive the Duchess of Kent and her little daughter, and around the elder, while they walked and conversed, played and prattled the little maid, pleased with the butterflies and flowers, who now is Queen Victoria, the white-haired, cat-nova mistress of the throne, the crown and all the honors and orders of Great Britain and India.

As at Hawarden castle lives—whenever he can get from the coil of state affairs to his beloved wood chopping, Gladstone, the "old man benedict," who has been an old man eloquent well in the cause of his race, the Jews, for whom he has seven times journeyed to the Holy Land, the last time in his ninety-first year—in order to comfort his co-religionists and relieve them both with money and counsel. For both he has succeeded—successfully—at nearly every throne in Europe, pleading in person for redress of wrongs, for the repeal of oppressive decrees, for juster privileges and opportunities, with so much majesty of presence, so much eloquence of feeling, and with reasonings so unanswerable that he could not be repulsed.

A SKETCH OF HIS LIFE. Moses Montefiore was born on the 24th of October, 1784, in Leghorn, where his father, Joseph Elias Montefiore, was a merchant. His mother was Rachel, daughter of Abraham Montefiore. He was a strong, handsome boy, in whom a practical vigorous mind very happily combined with a sensitive, affectionate and imaginative temperament.

His father, who was a merchant and entered the stock exchange when very young, and was in 1814 made treasurer of the Portuguese synagogue. Cordially respected for his unblemished honor and uprightiness, he was as ordinarily liked for his sincere, courteous and winning manners. In his love for Jerusalem, and his profound desire to see the Jewish people, he was a strong, handsome boy, in whom a practical vigorous mind very happily combined with a sensitive, affectionate and imaginative temperament.

LAST EVENING'S LECTURE.

"The Polished Shaft" was the title of a thoughtful discourse delivered by Rev. J. Q. A. Henry of East Portland, at the Baptist church last evening. The speaker took for the keynote of his discourse the necessity for culture. He spoke of needful discipline and culture of the body, the demand for a sound physical frame, the need of exercise and the observance of sanitary requirements that would insure immunity from disease and suffering.

From discussion of the means to advance the health of the body and the power of the mind, the speaker went into the discussion of the soul, the conscience, the spiritual element of man. He held that the quest of the Divine impulse in humanity, a lofty range of thought and an abiding faith in the future life and its teachings were necessary for a rightful development of man's full-companionship remained with him in the over-strengthening inspiration to leave no good thing undone that it was in his power to do. His benefactions were made in her name, which has continued to be associated with wise charities and constant deeds of kindness and sympathy.

Only a few months after her death he made another journey to the east, this time to rescue Christians from the persecutions of the Druses in Syria. He made a sixth visit to Constantinople in 1864, to get interested in the Jews of that city, and on the 24th of September, 1868, he died. Her tomb, modeled after that of Rachel, stands near the synagogue erected by Sir Moses at Ramsgate. They had no children, and his only surviving companion remained with him in the over-strengthening inspiration to leave no good thing undone that it was in his power to do.
