Mr. Fenton cited imaginary Republican arguments and answered the objections as he brought them up. He allowed that Republicans might want to say that they would vote for Blaine and Logan anyhow; that they didn't care for thest increase that they are that dead issues; that they saw that prohib ition would be the question, and that they were going to vote for Blaine and N. THE TARIFY QUESTION.

From that onward, I defy any man to point to a single measure of the Republican party which could not challenge the approval of God, and when, as one reverend speaker has said, "I narrowed the issue when I spoke of it coming down to a question of tariff," I did not mean to exclude therefrom (I could not mean to gun yesterday, arriving in from Alaska a lot of officials to make room for Demo-with a large freight and passenger list.

BLAINE'S BESPONSY. Mr. Chairman and Rev. Gentlemen:

This is altogether a very remarkable assemblage; remarkable beyond any of which I have known in the history of political contests in the United States, and it does not need my personal assurance that you should know that I am very deeply impressed by it. I do not feel that I am speaking to these hundreds of men merely. I am speaking to great congregations, and the great religious opinion which is behind them, and as they represent great Christian bodies, I know and I realize the full weight of that which you say to me, and of the influence which you tender to me. Were it to me personally, I confess that I should be overcome by the compliment and weight of confidence which it carries, but I know that it is extended to me as the representative of the party whose creed and whose practices are in harmony with the churches. The Republican party from its very outset stood upon the im-Mr. Chairman and Rev. Gentlemen: the churches. The Republican party from its very outset stood upon the im-pregnable platform of opposition to the extension of slavery, and stood upon that platform till it was drifted by the hostility it provoked into the larger assertion of national sovereignty, and thence into a bloody conflict to maintain it.

THE TARIFF QUESTION. poor man against the rich, and on that fact it based its claim to its right to live. The government was now collecting $100,000,000 annually more than it was spending and this surplus revenue, Blaine thought, should be divided among the states according to their population. Mr. Fenton thought that if that would work well it would be a good idea to tax the people to death and sand the taxes to Washington, and then pension every man, woman and child in the United States. Mr. Fenton thought that one act was as indicative of good statesmanship as the other. The tariff for manufactures was onerous. He had been told that Astoria paid a tax of $100,000 to a New Jersey manufacturer on thread from which nets were made. It was only the manufacturers that wanted a projective tariff and that measure had no right to continue. Men with shirt studs as large as the headlight of a locomotive were in Washington every session of congress waining and dining congressmen in the interest of tariff, and they were doing it for a purpose: they wanted a

There was no protective tariff on labor. With the exception of China, the laborer, titute places you clothe little naked chilthat places you could have naked children and give them food as the first step. Therefore I repeat that the great conflict of 1881 closes with the people of the United States standing face to face in the two parties, saying whether they will adhere to that policy of protection which has trebled the wealth of the United States in twenty years or whether they

Now, gentlemen of the church, I address an earnest word to you. The policy of the United States, in the past and in the future, must be one of broad, liberal, Christian principles, and in that policy it must be one, in my judgment, which draws nearer within the circle of the sympathies of the United States those other struggling republics of North and South America, which will bring them first into trade relations, and then into close personal and moral relations; and I believe that we shall not only have that great gain that comes from intercourse, but we shall enlarge this civilization of the Anglo-Saxon until its limit shall include the most southern point of the clude the most southern point of the continent. I did not intend, is accept-ing and acknowledging the great sense of obligation I feel for this honor, to go obtigation I feel for this honor, to go into a prolonged political speech. I have but indicated two leading points, which, I think, are involved in the pending election. It only remains for me to say to you that I recognize at its full worth, and its full worth is very great, the meaning of this assemblage. We have no union of church and state, but we have proved that the church is stronger without the

that the church is stronger without the state, and we have proved that no state can be strong without the church. Let us go forward as we have gone, the state growing and strengthening by the exam-ple of the church, and the church growing and strengthening by liberal co-op-erations with all great reforms, which it is the immediate province of government to forward and improve. Gentlemen, I thank you again, and bid you a very cordial good morning. Mr. Blaine was then greeted with three

Mr. Blame was then greeted with three ringing cheers, and Rev. Dr. McArthur called for and led in three equally hearty cheers for Mrs. Blaine. Mr. Blaine then descended to the foot of the stairs, and for some time remained shaking hands with the clergymen who had visited him.

INDICTED FOR BRIBERY.

J. A. Chapman, mayor of this city, was resterday indicted by the grand jury of Multnomah county for the crime of bribery, and just before court adjourned in the afternoon he was brought in and admitted to bail in the sum of $1000. Lu mitted to bail in the sum of $1000. Luzerne Besser, who was concerned in the same crime has also been indicted, but has not yet appeared in court to furnish bonds, nor is he yet in jail. A common chicken thief w.u d not have been shown so much courtery. But perhaps the county officials think as a gentleman said when he first heard of the indictment. "There's no use of putting Besser under bonds; you couldn't drive him out of town." The indictments recite the facts of the informous contract between Chapman and Besser, wherein the latter agreed man and Besser, wherein the latter agree that the former should receive certain sums of money for the giving out of cer-tain offices after his election to the mayoralty. The publication of this infamy thirteen months ago by the Oregonian has at last borne fruit. The long delay is not a very flattering comment upon the swiftness with which justice and the laws are administered in this section, at least so far as regards malfeasance in po-sitions of public trust.—Oregonian, 30.
