

The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON: WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12 1884

St. John's followers have discounted the future. The inauguration takes place in March. Till then the present regime continues.

PRESIDENT GREY has published a decree stating that the universal exhibition in Paris will open May 6, 1889.

From New York city were sent before election 2,800,000 St. John tickets to all parts of the state to be put where they would do the most good.

SOME of our Washington Territory exchanges delicately discourse of the "lady vote." Others discursively allude to the "female vote." They probably refer to the vote of the women.

The Salem Statesman brings up a nice little question. It says: "Suppose a state has given the franchise to women and at the presidential election one candidate has barely the majority of that one state's electors. Now could such election be challenged successfully on the ground that other states do not recognize women as legal voters?"

COMMISSIONER PINE of the New Orleans exhibition has chartered the steamer Great Eastern for one year. She is to carry the exhibits from several points to New Orleans free of charge to the owners of consignments and is afterwards to be used as a floating hotel. The managers of the exhibition expect to fasten the big steamer to the levee, and to give entertainments and receptions on board every evening while the exhibition lasts. The Great Eastern is expected to sail during the last week of November.

LAST Monday was done something that will have far more influence on the future of Astoria and the state than any possible result of the election which now fills the public eye to the exclusion of aught else. We refer to the completion of another transcontinental line. The O. R. & N. Co.'s lines were on the 10th connected with those of the Oregon Short Line. The passenger from Astoria bound eastward has now upon his arrival at Portland the choice of two lines of railroad, the N. P., or the P. All this hastens the day when ours will be the terminal city of a railroad system that will center at the mouth of our great river.

THE difference between theory and practice was never better exemplified than in the matter of presidential electors. The whole nation is now on the tiptoe of expectancy, waiting to see whether New York has voted "for Blaine or Cleveland," when the fact of the matter is that any one of the thirty-six electors elected in New York last Tuesday, no matter what ticket he happened to be elected on, can vote for whoever he pleases for president. That was the theory of the electoral college, but it would be a hardy man that would vote otherwise than for the presidential candidate of his party. It was done once, however, on the occasion of the electoral college of 1872, when one of the candidates—Horace Greeley—was dead, and the Democratic electors gave honorary votes to others.

ONE of the leading secretaries at the White House says that the business of the executive has increased largely since the days of Lincoln and Grant, writes a Washington correspondent. "Up until the time of Hayes," says he, "hardly a scrap of paper was kept here to show what the president did or why he did it. Now we keep a record of everything, and we make a point of answering every letter. Notes are kept of the contents of all important letters received, and, by our records here, in case of an appointment, we can tell just why and upon whose recommendation the appointment was made. In case the appointee turns out badly, the president is relieved of the blame and it is thrown upon those who recommended him. We receive a great many letters that should go to the various departments. Some poor woman in a distant part of the country wants a pension. She does not know anything about the pension bureau, and the only person in the government with whom she is acquainted is the president. She writes to him. Of course, her letter is referred by us to the pension office, and it is the same with other letters of the same class. As the executive office is carried on now, it is absolutely necessary to have a good force of clerks, and the day has passed when presidents can stand around the street-corners and ask every other person they meet to come and have a chat with them at the White House."
