A Porker in Chicago.

A lively piebald porker was one of a number grunting and quarreling in a pen, and I was asked to keep my eye on him.

What happened to that porker was this: He was suddenly seized by the hind leg and jerked up to a small crane.

This swung him safely to the fatal door through which a pig never returns.

On the other side stood a man. That two-handed engine at the door stands ready to smite once, and smite no more, and the dead pig shot through a trough and through another door.

He had fallen head first into a vat of boiling water. Some unseen machinery passed him along swiftly to the other end of the terrific bath, and there a water-wheel picked him up and flung him on to a sloping counter.

Here another machine seized him and with one revolution scraped him and with another revolution scraped him as bald as a nut.

And down the counter he went, losing his head as he slid past a man with a hatchet, and then, presto! he was up again by the heels.

In one dreadful handful a man emptied him, and while another squirted him with fresh water, the pig registering his own weight as he passed the teller's box, shot down the steel bar from which he hung, and whisked round the corner into the icehouse.

One long cut with a knife made two "sides of pork" out of that piebald pig. Two hocks of a hatchet brought away his backbone. And there, in thirty-five seconds from his last grunt—dirty, hot-headed, noisy—the pig was hanging up in two pieces, clean, tranquil, iced!
