HISTORICAL PARALLELS.

Although the silly alliteration of a preacher and an ill-advised dinner at a fashionable restaurant may have caused the defeat of Blaine in his recent battle for the presidency, there is no doubt that if the stalwart, or Conkling wing of the Republican party in New York had voted their regular ticket, the Maine statesman would be now the president-elect. The official figures show that 25,000 votes were cast in New York for St. John, the prohibition candidate, nearly every one of which rightfully belonged to Blaine. They were cast by Republicans of the stalwart stamp. If Conkling did not openly oppose his ancient enemy he did so secretly, which is less creditable to him. His revenge was more important to him and the little army of place-hunters who constituted the source of his power while senator from New York, than the perpetuation of Republican principles and the maintenance of the American policy of protection. Clay had his Nemesis in Andrew Jackson, as Blaine has in Roscoe Conkling. Jackson's grievance lay in his belief that Clay was one of those who cheated him out of the presidency in 1824, when the election was thrown into the house of representatives, and when, through a combination, John Quincy Adams was chosen, and Clay became his secretary of state.

What a striking parallel there is between the careers of Blaine and Clay! Blaine's difficulty began with a satirical speech made on the floor of the house when himself and Conkling were members, in which he compared the latter to a turkey cock, something that a man with less conceit than the New York would have laughed at as a joke. But Conkling never forgave the insult, as Jackson never forgave Clay for the performance in 1824. Conkling followed the Maine statesman into two national conventions, and each time deprived him of the honor of a nomination. Like Clay, Blaine is the most distinguished parliamentarian his party has produced. Clay was a candidate before the Whig convention of 1840, and after a severe struggle was set aside, as Blaine was set aside forty years afterward, and William Henry Harrison, the hero of Tippecanoe, became the nominee. Harrison was elected with a great hurrah, but, like Garfield, he died shortly after his inauguration. Four years afterward Clay, like Blaine forty years later, received the nomination of his party, but like the Maine statesman, he was beaten by the vote of New York, which was then, as now, the pivotal state. At the succeeding election the Whigs returned to power under the leadership of a military man, and soon after disappeared as a national organization.

The parallel proceeds no further, but it suggests a vast number of thoughts to the reflecting. Blaine will probably be known in history as the greater man of the two. Although Clay was a great orator, leader of an able parliamentarian, he never left us any such speeches and books as Blaine will leave. The Maine statesman, however, may find comfort in the fact that the really great men in both political parties have rarely reached the presidency, and in only one case has any man reached it through the speaker's chair of the house of representatives. There have been thirty speakers of the house since its organization in 1789. James K. Polk, who occupied the place during the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth congresses, was the only one who ever became president. The great Whigs who never secured the "sterling prize" were John Marshall, Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, the great Republicans, Salmon P. Chase, Oliver P. Morton and William H. Seward. The great men in the Democratic party who have cast longing eyes at the White House and seen mediocrity elevated to that pinnacle of grandeur during their lives are legion. John C. Calhoun, William L. Marcy, Lewis Cass, Silas Wright, William A. Crawford, Roger B. Taney, Jeremiah S. Black and Samuel J. Tilden were all the victims of antagonisms such as have lately caused the defeat of Mr. Blaine. Revenge and jealousy, those dark-bred passions of the human heart, thwarted their ambitions and sent them, in many cases, disappointed to their graves. Will the Maine statesman live long enough to invade this apartment?

Rough on Oregon.
"A few weeks ago Governor Stone-mason pardoned a prisoner from the Folsom prison on condition that he would leave the state never to return. The governor on Saturday morning last received a letter from him begging to be allowed to return to California, and stating that he would rather come back and serve his term out than be obliged to spend the remainder of his days in Oregon."
—S. F. Chronicle.
Instead of being "rough on Oregon," that an ex-convict should not like our state is decidedly to its credit, and complimentary at once to the morality of our people and the vigilance of our police. We are happy that thieves have so poor an opinion of Webfoot, and regret that the impression among them is not universal. California may glory in the praise of convicts and be proud of being known as a crook's paradise, but Oregon will ever take pride in the fact that rascals find our climate and people uncongenial.—Welcome.

AN OPEN RIVER.

An open river is of vital importance to the entire northwest, and it is the only means by which freight and fare can be released from the domination of railroads. If the Columbia river were open to navigation, the farmers of eastern Oregon and Washington wouldn't be forced to sell their wheat at a price which will not reimburse them for the time expended in growing the crop.
Let every person in the great northwest who is interested in the development of the country join hands in a giant effort to have the Columbia river opened from its highest navigable waters to the sea, and let the press voice the sentiments of the people. The impediments to navigation are few and easily overcome, and with one-hundredth part of the appropriations already given by the government to improve the Mississippi, the Columbia river would not now be locked to commerce by a corporation whose stocks have sold in Wall street for a little over $20 a share. It is a well known fact that the 300,000 square miles drained by this river would receive yearly thousands of industrious immigrants if there was an outlet to seaboard except over the line of a grinding monopoly. The power of railroad corporations is waning, and now is the time for the people to demand of their representatives in congress good and effective work. With an open river, the N. P. R. R. or O. R. & N. could not dictate terms to producers, but a fleet of boats would do the carrying trade, and wheat would be delivered to ships in Portland or Astoria at less than one-half the price now charged.

The last year has witnessed a great liberation of the people from party control, and take this opportunity to let those men know who desire your support, that your first interest is in your homes and the support of your families, and demand of them honest work in the direction of freeing this land, from which you receive your sustenance, from the control of corporations. The people of this vast inland empire have been literally owned by railroad corporations, and they have taxed every acre cultivated and bushel of wheat raised. Let this be no longer for divorced from party managers, you have the power to regulate matters to suit yourselves.
The people need organization, leaders, and a consolidated effort, and there can be no doubt of success. At the time the road was building, the great railroad king knew how to use his advantages and advertise them. Henry Villard, speaking of the Cascades and Dalles portages, said to the stockholders of the Transcontinental, "We hold the key to the situation." Grasp it from them and keep it in your possession. Let our producers come to the front and grade the situation. The people who are kings in their own right, should at this time buckle on the armor and gain their freedom.—Dalles Times-Mountaineer.

Official Returns.
The following is the official returns for countymen and representatives in the district comprising the counties of Pacific, Chehalis, Wahkiakum and Cowlitz.

BOWEN & VAN CLAY V. D. GOODSELL.
Pacific	180
Chehalis	596
Wahkiakum	123
Cowlitz	439
Totals	1,338
Bowen's plurality, 25.

REPRESENTATIVES.
Pacific	298
Chehalis	367
Wahkiakum	114
Cowlitz	428
Totals	1,177

CAPT. R. ROGERS, D. STEPT, RALPH D. TEF, R., and GOODSELL.
Pacific	388
Chehalis	491
Wahkiakum	53
Cowlitz	428
Totals	1,371

Teff, R., and Goodsell, D., get majorities of 34 and 391, respectively.
There were 6 scattering votes cast for councilmen, and 49 for representatives, J. J. Foster of Wahkiakum receiving 34 of them. A glance at these tables will show that the slipshod way the Democrats made their nominations lost them votes enough to elect their candidate for the council. We speak of this to show the fallacy of each county making a nomination and then correspond with the other counties to complete the ticket.—Gray's Harbor News.

Wives For Sale (cheap).
In some parts of England men who get tired of their wives sell them as low as six pence apiece. Sometimes a wife is traded off for a quart of beer. Both husbands and wives in such cases are very disagreeable persons. Possibly they are the victims of dyspepsia and liver complaint, and their health is badly run down. Such people may not be worth doctoring, but nice people who are run down by these ailments, should try Brown's Iron Bitters, which will bring them right up.
Everybody wants to sell, but nobody wants to buy real estate in England now.
Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.
