In early times before salmon in the east became a luxury, apprentices and workingmen stipulated that they should not have salmon served to them more than so many times a week. With saimon held in such little esteem and pro curable at a very low price, it is very amusing for a person in the latter part of the nineteenth century to look back on such anecdotes and smile at what to The trade generally will be pleased to him seems an almost fabulous yarn. As hear that the new season's saimon, by mills and manufactories increased in the four vessels whose arrival in Mersey numbers and cities sprung up along the was notified in our report of last week, river banks, salmon became less and less eastern market in its salmon supplies. Salmon picking has not been a very profitable business the pist few years, and should a market be found in the castern centers of trade, for the year; catch of fresh salmon, many firms win interest themselves in this new basiness as being the most profitable in the end. Some firm; already make a business of supplying fresh salmon on orders from the east, and have done well.

Other firms have lost considerable in the new enterprise and have paid dearly for their experience. With experience gained however, they may see their way clear this coming season to recover the money they dropped this year. As the canned salmon puck has increased, new countries have been looked to for marketing it, and Australia has become a very good customer. England is the dis-tributing point however for the European market, but consumes the bulk of her receipts.

Fresh salmon are at present hard to get to the eastern markets at the right time and to meet the right market for remunerative prices. Transportation, packages and ice are very expansive and until the freight and express charges are materially reduced, shipping to the cast materially reduced, shipping to the east in la g: qu nit ea, except in the few weeks when salmon are mostly used, with be a purely speculative venture. Reduce the cost of pickages and ice in the north west, reduce the freight to canned salmon rates, and twenty times the amount now used in the U. S. could be safely and profitably marketed the from the Columbia river alone.
