An Important Decision.

Judge Deady has decided a very important question in the United States circuit court. It was the case of Barnhart and Anderson, who killed an Indian policeman on the Umatilla reservation on May 13th, last. They were tried for murder in the state circuit court at Pendleton and acquitted. They were subsequently indicted by the United States grand jury, and on being arraigned entered a plea of former acquittal. The United States district attorney demurred to the plea, and Judge Deady has sustained the demurrer. He held that the United States courts of Oregon have jurisdiction over all crimes committed on the Umatilla reservation by white men against the persons or property of Indians, and vice versa, so far as the same have been defined by an act of congress. The gist of the decision is contained in the concluding paragraph, which is as follows: "In short, it is impossible that the United States can maintain its paramount authority over subjects committed by the constitution to its jurisdiction, and at the same time allow the trial in a state court on a criminal charge growing out of an act that congress has defined to be a crime, to be a bar to prosecution thereafter in its own courts and according to its own law." A very great deal of interest was felt in the decision throughout the state, because it is final and settles a question which has vexed the courts ever since the state was formed. Juries in the state courts have never regarded it as a crime for a white man to kill an Indian, and acquittals have always followed trials. Barnhart and Anderson will be arraigned for trial this week.
