Grumbling.

Talking of grumbling, there is one source of grumbling which is sup-plied by feelings of self importance and innate dignity. People think it beneath them to be too easily pleased; they are not the sort of folks that anything will be anything will do for-not they-and they seek to prove by grumbling at what they have the superior quality or what they ought to have. How many are they who are nothing if not critical; but it is not their dis-cernment that makes them spy faults; it is the wish to be thought to have discenment. Tallent is proved in their estimation by fault-finding. They gramble over a work of art, not so much to show what a stupid fel-low the author is as what smart fel-lows they are for having found out his short-comings. Goldsmith taught a golden rule to the art grumblers: "Say that the picture would have been better painted had the painter taken more pains." Safe and sure, no criticism enunciated, no theory Astoris Longe No. 10. G.1.
