An organization was effected by the election of Mr. C. C. Brower, president; Mrs. F. E. Martin, vice president; Miss Dora Badollet, secretary and treasurer. The object of the society is social reunion and mutual improve-ment. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws, and the certificate to him meeting adjourned to meet the same hour and place next Friday evening. Samuel Hall, whose eccentricity was heretofore noticed, was yesterday examined by a medical board and pronounced insune. He has manifested an active and material interest in the Lord's welfare, and a due regard for the requirements of such an extraordinary case impelled the board to send him where the procedure will not occasion so much individual expense. Jno. Bach was also pronounced insane. His peculiarity consists in selection of property. He enters dwelling houses that strike his fancy and starts arguments with the owners regarding their possessory rights that amoy those who hold warranty deeds to the premises and naturally object to any disquieting of title. Douglas 4. Grant 2. Jackson 4. Lane 4. Lane 5. Marion 7. Multnomah 15. Polk 3. Tillamook 1. Umatilla 7. Union 4. Wasco 5. Washington 3. Yamhill 7. It is provided that these delegates shall be chosen by general election, the first Saturday in June, and incumbency of a state or county office does not bar membership. It is moved to the product of the now free of charge. priates $7,500 for expens When the returns of the electoral col-lege of Oregon were sent to Wash-ington, one copy was sent by a special messenger, as the law directed, and the other copy, instead of being sent by mail to the vice president, was sent to the president who consed the to the vice president, was sent to the president, who opened the package. President Arthur saw that a mistake had been made, and he sent the package immediately to the president of the senate, with a note explaining how he came in possession of the official vote. Edmunds, so as to be on the safe side, declined to receive the package, and suggested the course which was adopted by both houses last Thursday, in sending a special messenger for the official record of votes. A similar error occurred in connection with the vote of Iowa. A pleasant trip has thus been provided for two gentlemen. The messenger who comes to Oregon will get about $1.100 mileage, while his expenses will not in reality be more than $400.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT.

The Officers Have Their Cortificates Esturned to Them

The naval court composed of Vice-Consul Cherry and Captains Sersber and Olesen, which convened on Thursday to inquire into the loss of the Abbey Couper, completed their inquiry yesterday Several witnesses were examined: Capt. Gregory, of the Shubrick, Capt. Geo. Wood, Capt. Al. Stream and members of the crew. Following is a copy of the findings of the court:

This naval court finds, after due delib-ration, that the British bark Abbey ration, that the outer sands of eration, that the British bark Abbey Coveper was lost on the outer sands of the entrance of Shoalwater bay, Washington territory, U. S. A., the vessel taking the ground about 11 p. m., of the 4th of January, 1885. The evidence brings out that at 9 p. m., of the evening of the stranding the ship was about 8 miles W 14 S, magnetic, from Toke Pt. lighthouse at the entrance to Shoalwater bay, and not 15 miles as was supposed by the master, and to this error can be attributed the primary cause of the loss of the vessel.

The court finds the master was correct in shaping his course, as he did, direct for Cape Disappointment, at the entrance of the Columbia river, from his supposed position taking into consideration his, then, knowledge of the trend of the coast direction of the wind. The court sleo finds that it was not known by the master that he was coming to the northwest coast of North America, and therefore was not supplied with proper charts; that he used all endeavors to procure the same after receiving his orders to proceed same after receiving his orders to proceed same after receiving his orders to proceed to Portland Oregon, for that purpose boarding the British bark Buttermere, and could only procure from her master a general chart of the Pacific coast of North America. That this chart did not show any soundings or lights. That the facts of the northerly currents set-ting shorewards, the strong suck caused by Shoalwater bay, and the distance that the shoals extend from the entrance of Shoalwater bay was not known to the master, exonerates him in a great meas-

But that on the other hand the master is strongly to blame in that with such is strongly to blame in that with such poor charts, no sailing directions, and no experience of this coast, he allowed the vessel to head a shy course along the land with only one light visible, without using his lead or giving any orders to the officer on deck to do so when he left the deck. The court also finds that the first officer, A. C. Bevan, was in charge of the vessel at the time of the stranding and for three hours previously: that in the opinion of the court he is to be censured for not having sent word to the captain of the difference in the bearings of the lights between 9:30 r. M., and 10 r. M., 234 points in the course of half an hour; also that he should have used his own judgpoints in the course of half an hour; also that he should have used his own judgment in putting the helm hard up to wear the ship round and sending for the captain instead of going himself before doing anything. The court also finds that from the moment the helm was put hard up everything was done that could be done under the circumstances: that the drifting away of nearly half the crew crippled the resources of the master. crippled the resources of the master; that he made all exertion in getting help after landing and keeping his crew the caution that only his youth and gen-eral inexperience together with his for-mer good character prevents the court from making a more marked example than the censure with which it returns to him his certificate. The court has pleasure in returning the second mate's

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.] WASHINGTON, JSD. 7, 1885.

tony of routine proceedings at the capitol has nearly always an underourrent of fun. It is in the cloub rooms that this current runs at its height. When your representative or senator seeks the seclusion of this sacred precinct, just outside the doors of this legislative chamber, he usually lights a cigar, unbuttons his coat, throws himself on a sofs or in one chair with his feet on another, relaxes himself generally, and is not helf a bad fellow. He then talks with freedom and vivacity, and secure from the observation of the public he shows his best, and, alas! sometimes his worst side. Then he expresses his views of men and things with candor and caustic calmness, and indulges his inclination for practical jokes.

Senator Garland is an incorrigible mischief maker, and his fun is not confined to the seclusion of the cloak rooms. Butler, of south Georgia, is another mad wag in the senate, and he and Garland are constantly playing jokes. more or less outrageous, on each other.

Not long ago Garland hit Butler pretty hard—that is to say he got a very good one on him; and Butler "laid for" the senator from Arkansas. Knowing Garland's fondness for candy he procured some caramels and also some cubes of brown soap, which when wrapped in thin brown soap, which when wrapped in thin tissue paper, precisely resembled, to the eye, the caramels! Batler knew that if he tried to put the cubes of soap off on Garland he would fail, as the latter was of course on the alert so far as he was concerned. So Voorhees of Indians, who sits next to Garland, was chosen for the confederate. Said Butler to Voorhees, "Here are two genuine caramels—these ethers are cubes of soap. Go to your seat, lay the soap cubes on your deak, ext. seat, lay the soap cubes on your desk, eat the genuine caramels, put your trust in providence, and say nothing." Voorhees did as he was told. Garland observed the cubes on the desk, and saw that Voor hees was eating something with an evident relish.

"Hello" said Garland, "what are you eating?" "I've got a cold, and I'm eating some candy," replied Voorhees, very much absorbed in some papers in his hands. Garland looked at the counterfeits wistfully for a moment. "Hum," he said finally, as he picked one up, "I've got something of a cold myself," and he popped the piece of soap into his mouth. There was a crunching of his jaws, and—he saw that he was caught. Voorhees watched him out of the tail of his eye, as did a dozen others of the old boys sitting around. Garland knew he was under fire, but he determined not to flinch. After chewing his soap for a moment he looked up at Voorhees with the inimitable air of innocent earnestness that is characteristic of him, and softly asked, "Do you eat many of these things when you acteristic of him, and softly asked, "Do you eat many of these things when you have a cold?" As Garland kept on chew ing an almost imperceptible strip of lather formed on his lips, Voorhees became alarmed and went to Butler. "The fellow's actually eating that stuff! Why, it will kill him, won't it?" "No-o-o," drawled Butler, "I don't reckon anything will kill that man!" Garland was game. He finished his sosp, and no man could say that he looked as if he didn't enjoy it. The health of the cabinet is cause for rejoicing in society here, and I hear that together.

The court therefore in returning the master's certificate to him does so with a strong censure of his neglect in not having the lead hove when approaching a strange coast, he knowing that it is a usual custom so to do on all British vessels, and hopes that he will take warning in this particular in the future.

Also the court reprimands first mate A. C. Bevan on his want of self trust in not heaving the lead, and, when he heard the breakers, sending for the master at once and taking measures of at once pulling the vessel on the other tack.

Mr. Bevan's certificate is returned with the caution that only his youth and genther and the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther was a carniform and the cautions are the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will prebably begin her the caution that only his youth and genther will be two public will prebably begin her the caution that the present month and one during february. president does not mean to give his successor the chance to eclipse him in the way of entertainments, and the cabinet will follow his example. To this end it is probable that there will be two public receptions at the White hones during the present month and one during February. Mrs. McElroy will prebably begin her afternoon receptions next Saturday. Mrs. Arthur, wife of the president's brother William, is still a guest at the White house.

ALEC DUNHAM'S BOAT.

From the Nantucket Inquirer.

There she lies at her moorings. The little two-master. Loose swings the rudder.
Unshipped the tiller—
Crossing the bar so,
One sea would fill her?

Foresail and mainsail! In loose folds are lying; Naked the mastheads are-

No pennon flying;
Sea-weed and wreck
Alike may drift past her;
Here lies the pilot-boat—
Where is her master? Lantern at Great Point, Brightly it burneth: Beacon on Brant Point The signal returneth.

Far out to sea Sankoty flashes; White on the shore The crusted wave dashes.

Strident northeaster And smoky sou'wester Call for the pilot-boat, Eager to test her. And a ship on the bar, Just where the waves cast her: Moored lies the pilot-boat-Where is her master?

Oh, bark driving in, God send that you lee get, Past Tuckernuck shoals, The reefs of Maskeget. There go minute-guns; Now faster and faster-

But no more to their aid Flies the little two-master. For the pilot one night
Left his boat as you see her—
Light-moored, that if signal came
He ready might free her.
But not from her moorings
Did the pilot's hand cast her,
Though a signal he answered—
One set by the Master.

Gone, say you, and whither? You ask me which way Went good pilot as ever Brought ship into bay? Who shall say how he cast off If to starboard or larboard? But of one thing I'm sure— The pilot's safe harbored.

OUR EIGHT-DAY CLOCK. We have a new clock-an eight-day clock. Our clock is warranted to run eight days. As a matter-of-fact it generally pulls up a little short of the advertised time; but then, what machine does not? Even man, who is good for three-score years and ten, runs down before sixty. It is wonderful, when one thinks of it, that a clock should run so long. All we have to do, onee a week, is to convert a certain amount of muscle into mechanical force, and wind the clock up, and it takes a new lease of life. One cannot forbear envying it the sim One cannot forbear envying it the simple existence that it leads, without pains, aches, or troubles of its own or of its friends, to worry it. Withal its life is not one of indolence, and is monotonous to a degree, or perhaps we should say, to a minute. Uncomplaininingly it repeats its "tick-tock" day in and day out. What did people do in the days preceding clocks? A clepsydra never could have supplied its place. It is a companion and a friend. It almost smiles at one as he looks up from his work, and yet it is a merciless destroyer of time. We have sometimes tried to catch our "eight-day" napping. In the middle onr "eight-day" napping. In the middle of the night we have, as it were, felt its pulse. The beat was as regular and made as "healthful music" as in the day. Then we think of little Paul Dombey and the great clock in Blimber's hall. Every clock appears to be repeating some tale or other. In these times, when sto-ries are so much in demand, we wish we could interpret the legend. So far we have not caught the clue.

We love to sit this way in the night with the new year the work of persons in growth of the inauguration ceremonies appear to have received a fresh impetus.

The headquarters on F street present a busy and bustling appearance. Applications are asleep, our only comrade this time-eating fellow. As the hands this time-enting fellow. As the hands count off the advancing hours, our mind goes back to antecedent friends when the clock was not. How far away childhood seems, how mystical and dreamy the people and the deeds of that day. Who is there who would not, if he could, who is there who would not, if he could, turn back the hands upon the dial plate, and begin his score anew? Yet it may be doubted if any of us, did we ever possess the chance, would improve upon the record we have made. It is better to forget the past, or to remember it only so far as to make the future nobler. Then when the produlum escape to vi-Then when the pendulum ceases to vi-brate, and the heart beats its last, we can say, "It is well; we have done our
