The case of Frank White comes up in the justice court to day this afternoon.

The Janet McNeil goes into the O. R. & N. Dock and will begin discharging her cargo of cannery supplies this afternoon.

The Chelsea cleared for Queenstown yesterday with 12,000 lbs flour, worth $29,012, the first foreign flour shipment from the Columbia in '85.

It is thought from the way bills are piling into the house that that work will not be half through with the body it is cutting out for itself when the day of adjournment arrives.

Checkers county people have sent a petition to the legislature asking that that august body establish "a free tug at the mouth of the Columbia." Better establish two free tugs, one would hardly be enough for the growing commerce of the Columbia.

In the house on the 28th, Mr. Leinenweber introduced a memorial asking congress to investigate the question of fish traps in the Columbia river with a view to creating a commission with power to order them taken out. The bill is given in a special in another column.

A report of inquiry into the cause, which were prominent in occasioning the disaster to the early English bark Diana (Grosspounder) at Shoalwater by some twelve days ago, is now in session. It is composed of Mr. P. L. Cherry, British Vice Consul, Capt. Davies of the Chilean and Jones of the Janet McNeil.

A bill having passed the legislature regarding the terms of the circuit court for this county which afforded no tangible relief, and having been vetoed by the governor, another bill has been introduced by Mr. Leinenweber. This bill sets the court terms for Clatsop county in January, May and September, and will be more generally approved than the first one.

The moon falls this morning, but Gerhard Nelson, who, it is said gets "a little off" at that period, was a little previous last night and about ten o'clock made it very lively for the inmates of the Germania hotel. He realized into the bar room clad in an airy robe de nuit and playfully throwing one man across the room he crossed the bar keeper till that party's head bled; then they surrounded him and he was put in jail.

The Senatorial Straddle.

SALEM, Jan. 20.—The only material change in the situation here is the transfer of the temporary Democratic support to Judge McArthur of The Dalles, completely shelving Stater. It is anybody's fight yet and after finishing up the complimentary voting part of the business this week the real fight as to who shall be the successful man will begin Sunday night. There is all sorts of rumors here; it is hinted that $40,000 is on tap, but one can't believe all he hears. The joint ballot to-day resulted as follows: McArthur, 36; Hirsch, 14; Hare, 6; Johnson, 6; George, 6; Boise, 3; Kelsey, 6; Failing, 3; Hill, 2; Williams, 2; Caples, 1; Fulton, 1; Applegate, 1; blank, 1; absent, 2.

GOSSIP ABOUT THE PRESIDENT-ELECT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—A New Yorker, who seems to have enjoyed fair opportunities for observation, says: "Cleveland is like General Sherman or General Grant in his tastes. Neither of the three care very much about what they eat, so it is plain and well cooked. As for the artistic cuisine of the French school, Cleveland knows nothing about it and cares less. 'My education in this respect has been neglected.' I heard him say once, 'and I am now too old to learn.' He is a fairly good drinker, so the table menage will not be an ice water one, but his drinking is mainly beer, though he relishes a cocktail now and then. He is very regular in his sleeping and cannot sit up all night, as General Arthur used to do, and does sleep, I believe, and not feel it. I never saw such a man as Arthur is in this respect. He becomes brighter after midnight, and about two in the morning, after he has had a good supper and a bottle or two of champagne, he is positively brilliant. We used to call him the owl at Albany, for he seemed never to sleep, and I believe he is the same still. Cleveland's capacity for hard work is wonderful, and he has not had a day of illness, worth speaking of, since he was a boy. As for intimate friends, he never had any. I don't mean that he lacks in social qualities, for he doesn't; but as for extreme intimacy of the David and Jonathan type I have never known him to have any such since he has been a man. Then he has another unusual quality, and that is unscrupulousity. No woman could ever influence him a whit. It has often been tried, especially of late years, but never succeeded. He is absolutely free from that weakness that often pertains to so many otherwise strong men."

THE MEMORIAL TO CONGRESS.

Concerning Fish Traps in the Columbia.

SALEM, Jan. 20.—The following memorial has passed both the senate and house and goes to congress:

HOUSE JOINT MEMORIAL NO. 9. To the Honorable, the Congress of the United States:

Whereas, One of our greatest manufacturing enterprises on the Pacific coast is in need of immediate congressional attention, we, the legislative assembly of the state of Oregon, most respectfully call your attention to the salmon fisheries of the Columbia river. From a small beginning ten years ago, it has grown to an immense business, aggregating a production of 600,000 cases annually, representing millions of capital, and is now next on the list of exportations from the state of Oregon to that of the entire farming production. There fore, it is of the greatest importance to regulate this large business so that it may be perpetuated. This salmon is now rapidly coming in use for daily consumption all over the United States, England and Australia, and will increase annually making it of the greatest importance to the state of Oregon, that the mode and manner of taking this salmon should be regulated and the business fostered; therefore, be it

Resolved, That whereas within two years past certain parties have assumed rights unconstitutionally and have resorted to taking salmon by means of certain salmon traps so situated as to interfere with the free navigation of the Columbia river as against the usual way of fishing by gill nets in former years. The assumption of this manner of fishing with traps is giving unscrupulous men the advantage over law-abiding citizens, and cannot with safety to the prosperity of this business and the peace and dignity of the state of Oregon be much longer maintained.

We, therefore, your petitioners, citizens of Clatsop county, Oregon, hereinafter set forth, for want of jurisdiction in conjunction with Washington territory, pray that proper authority be granted a commission to be sent to the fishing grounds, with power to act and that if found upon investigation that these fish traps are unlawfully maintained to cause a removal of the same at once.

During 1884 a large number of fishermen lost their lives on account of these fish traps, and private property to the extent of thousands of dollars has been lost, causing public sentiment to be aroused and the calling of public meetings of indignation.

Whereas, unless the rights of these traps be more clearly defined, there is great danger of riots and bloodshed, therefore we deem it most essential that immediate steps be taken toward a settlement of their complications.

We further protest against a repetition of military interference, unless called for by the governor of this state.

Oregon being a law abiding state we most emphatically protest against a repetition of military interference as was indulged in 1884.

When we need the military assistance, his excellency, the governor of Oregon will call for it; until such time we pray the honorable secretary of war be respectfully requested to cause such orders to be issued at once to the respective department commanders to prevent further interference.

In our opinion, if trap fishing now in use is lawful, then the privilege no doubt is a public one. Since your petitioners, however, honestly believe the present traps in use to be an imposition, infringement and contrary to free navigation, we hope and pray that your immediate attention and investigation be most respectfully granted.

In support of the foregoing memorial we beg leave to submit a petition signed by a large number of business men and fishermen, who claim to have the interest of this business at heart, and desire the peace and dignity of our state maintained. That the secretary of state cause copies of these resolutions to be forwarded to the honorable senators and representatives of the state of Oregon in the congress of the United States, and your memorialists will ever pray, etc.

THE GALVESTON HARBOR.

Some Plain Talk in Opposition to Eads.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20.—Between rival engineers and lobbyists the Galveston harbor job is in a bad way. The Prussian jetty builder, Romer, who came here with elaborate plans and a proposition to do all that Capt. Eads proposes, had a financial backer but he hasn't got him now. The man with money, after giving Romer the strongest kind of indorsement, suddenly drew off the scene and left Washington. This, however, does not mean that the backbone of the opposition to Capt. Eads is broken. Several large contractors have representatives here who are doing all they can against the bill. They insist that if congress is going to take the improvement out of the hands of the United States engineers the job should be let to the lowest bidder.

Col. Robert Alexander, who has bitterly opposed the Eads bill, and who is a large contractor, says, "I am dead set against this special legislation. Why should Mr. Eads construct here for $8,700,000 in the improvement of Galveston harbor and entrance? He wants to entirely ignore the United States engineers and throw the matter into the hands of the geodetic survey. He would place it where the secretary of war could not stop anything that he might do. He does not know what he is bidding on. He does not tell where he proposes to begin and where he will end. He could make the work cost him $2,000 or $2,000,000, and he looks out every contractor in the United States. If Mr. Eads has the wonderful mind he is reputed as having, he need not be afraid of small contractors. What we want is simple justice. Let the government make a small appropriation and send down its engineers and make a survey of Galveston harbor and its entrance; then appoint a commission of three United States engineers, three from civil life, and one from the Geodetic service, they to decide upon the improvement to be adopted, and let them make the maps of the survey public; then let the government advertise for the best plan for the improvement and offer a premium, say of $5,000, for it, the plan to be the property of the United States. If the commission then see fit to employ the maker of the plan, let them employ him to superintend the work, the engineers, however, to have full supervision."

Col. Alexander concluded by asking: "What are our government engineers good for? Why have we a West Point to make them to? Mr. Eads wants over $8,000,000 to do the work with, much as he did the jetty. Why, there are parties who will do it for one-half that sum, and the government will not go into the work blindly."

THE CITY CHARTER AGAIN.

Is a Property Tax Paying Qualification Constitutional?

ASTORIA, Jan. 20, 1885.

EDITOR ASTORIAN: Presuming from the item in your issue this morning that your patience is not yet fully exhausted, please allow the following in answer to the criticisms in THE ASTORIAN of to-day over the name of "Cumtux."

Before "Cumtux" complains of our knowledge of constitutions and American jurisprudence, he had better make it appear that he himself understood the simplest principles of logic. Let him boast when he shall have returned from the conflict.

We will review his statements and answer his questions, commencing about the middle of his article, where the disagreement between his and our interpretation begins.

After quoting Secs. 1 and 2 of Art. II of the state constitution, he says, "From the reading of these sections it is plain that no restriction of suffrage can be made unless otherwise provided for in the constitution. The question now is: Where in the constitution is that restriction provided for?"

We agree with him there. We answer: The restriction of suffrage in school district elections is provided for in the charter made by the legislative assembly for school districts, regulating the proceedings for forming districts, electing officers, the qualifications of voters, the duties of directors, clerks, teachers, superintendents, etc.

The legislature has made one general law for smaller sized districts, and another general law for districts having a much larger number of voters—such as the district which comprises the city of Portland.

Just in the same manner the legislature makes a charter for Astoria, and a very similar one for Eugene, or Salem, or The Dalles or for Portland; and if all these places were similar in their situation, in the occupation of their people, etc., and only differed in population, the legislature might with no impropriety enact a general law as a charter for all similar places in the state, and in that law restrict and extend the right of suffrage at the several city elections, just as they have done in school district elections or in a different manner if they saw fit to do so, provided the restriction is contained in some other clause of the state or the United States constitution.

That is to say, "that restriction is provided for in every act of the legislature for organizing cities, towns, school districts, railroad, or manufacturing corporations, in which acts the legislature prescribes or ought to prescribe the qualification of voters. The qualification of voters at the election of officers in the constitution are the only voters' qualifications that the constitution attempts to define."

And the qualifications of voters at all the elections otherwise provided for in that instrument are such as are named in the act authorizing such other elections.

The several acts authorizing city, town, school district, or other incorporated companies' elections, both public and private corporations, may legally prescribe the qualifications of voters at such elections, any where within the bounds of reason and justice; provided the bill of rights of the state constitution and the United States constitution be not contravened.

Next, "Cumtux" says section 5, article 1, plainly provides what restrictions are to be placed upon municipal corporations, to wit: "shall restrict the power of taxation, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit." Does "Cumtux" say that the legislature could not restrict the power of the city of Astoria to encroach upon and ultimately destroy the harbor and ship channel in front of our city? There is some more of his logic!

We think the legislature can restrict the powers of cities and towns incorporated by them in any way they see fit, in said section 5, article 1. They "shall restrict" as named therein and they may restrict, alter, amend or abolish, provided corporate rights are not impaired, etc., in many ways not named in section 5.

Finally, "Cumtux" thinks we would not claim that women can be legally made voters in city elections under our constitution as it now is, etc.

We certainly do claim that school district organizations and the elections at school meetings are under our constitution and laws entirely analogous to the city organizations and elections, especially in the matter of the right of suffrage, the power and duty of the several classes of organizations, and their dependence upon legislative authority for existence in any form. And further that as our state constitution does not forbid "women" the privilege of voting, they may very properly have that privilege extended to them by a simple act of the legislative assembly.

Section 2 of article 2 of the constitution names generally the voters, to wit: sections 3, 5, 6 and 7 names who shall not vote, and no mention is made of about one-half of all the adult people of the state in any of those five sections.

But Sec. 1 of said Art. II, says "All elections shall be free and equal." What does that sentence mean? It means the elections shall be free and equal to all persons who are equally entitled in consideration of the objects for which elections are held, to the protection of life, liberty, property and the pursuit of happiness. But more anon as to women's rights under the constitution.

CHINESE GAMBLERS.

Some of the Doings of the Chinese Colony.

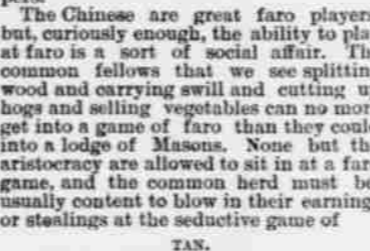

We have among us a singular colony. The members wash our clothes and spit our wood and steal our coal oil and ham from the back shed and in other ways act like ordinary humans, but in practice and habits they are as different as though they came from 80 other little mudball beside this little speck we call the earth. In no way is this more pronounced than in their ways of gambling, for your Chinaman is an inveterate gambler and would gamble off anything from a button to the honor of his wife on the turn of a die.

They have regular headquarters, the principal one being on Chenamus street, where they congregate nightly. In the smaller dens the several domesticities employed through the city "keep up" the usual requirements. One meek faced Mongolian who works for you is relied upon to steal potatoes for the week from the house of his Caucasian employer. Another slips out of your kitchen with sugar in his apron, another steals candles, another oil, and so on, the result being that at the rendezvous there is never any lack of supplies. They haven't any use for tea or rice, looking with contempt on us ignorant barbarians and importing their own; as for coffee, it is usually safe from the light fingered ones of the guild. Clocks, cups, dishes of various kinds are also pilfered, the thieves showing a liking for the more ordinary kind of crockery that can not be identified.

The most of this stolen property can be converted into cash and furnishes an inconsiderable source of revenue to the game. This game is profitable to several, most of all to the owners and its capers.

The Chinese are great faro players, but, curiously enough, the ability to play at faro is a sort of social affair. The common fellows that we see splitting wood and carrying swill and cutting up hoes and selling vegetables can no more get into a game of faro than they could into a lodge of Masons. None but the aristocracy are allowed to sit in at a faro game, and the common herd must be usually content to blow in their earnings or stealings at the deductive game of TAX.

Tax is a banking game, and is directed by a banker and look-out, who takes the money lost and pays out the money won. An ordinary square or oblong table is covered with an oil cloth, in the center of which is this diagram:

The player can bet on any one of these numbers, or two or more of them. Small slips of red pasteboard and the Chinese coins known as cash are used as markers to indicate modifications in the straight bet. At the commencement of the game the banker takes from a large heap before him a handful of white bone buttons, which without counting he immediately half covers with a brass bell-shaped instrument on which a number of the white characters are wrought. The players then make their bets. One places $1 on the "4" and underneath it one of the pasteboard slips in such a manner that the coin rests in the center of the slip; another bets on the corner between the "4" and "2" and a third for example, bets on the "2," but places on top of his bet a pasteboard slip, one end resting on the coin and the other pointing to the "11."

The bets having been all made, the banker removes the cover and spreads the buttons out on the table. With a light, curved piece of cane he removes the buttons from the heap four at a time until the last four are removed or a fraction of four left. If the number of buttons are divisible by four, he pays the bet on that number that had the slip under, that indicating that the player bet that the buttons were an equal set of four, and he pays it three times. If the player had one or two buttons left, the bet on the corner would be paid only once, the chances being equal between the bank and the player. The same would hold good in regard to the bet on the "11." It is not to be supposed that this is the only way in which bets can be made at faro. The combinations are as many if not more numerous, than those mentioned, and a recent explanation has been given of the game to make its principles plain to the clouded understanding of the "outer barbarian."

Tax is a game which either makes or breaks its votaries in short order. "I don't say a looker-on," watching it the other evening for certainly not more than ten minutes. A Chinaman who seemed well fixed was playing. He bet a $10 piece each time on a single number for three times, and each time won. He then bet $20 and won again, and then, with a grunt of satisfaction, pocketed his winnings and left the saloon. Of course the bank, as in all banking games, has a source of profit the latter has and has a deduction of 7 1/2 per cent, is made from all winnings. I asked the lookout who talked good English, what this cover was for.

"Well," he said, "it is to keep the players from counting the buttons before they plank down their stuff."

"It would take them some time to do that?"

"Very little time. The Chinese are the best counters in the world; and long before I know myself, and while there are a lot of buttons remaining uncounted, they know whether they have won or lost."

"It was amusing to watch a display of that smartness which has won the Celestial his reputation."

For ways that are dark, And for tricks that are vain, though in the present instance the trick was not vain. He had one of the strips of cardboard on his bet, and was watching his count with the most intense eagerness. Another Chinaman leaned over the table for a moment, and at the same time the player, with a strong breath, blew the marker off. He was paid three times by the banker, who had not observed the little trick. Had he let the marker remain he would have been paid only once, as he was betting on two numbers.

Chinese are far more demonstrative over the gambling table than white men, giving vent to heathenish complaint when they lose, and to guttural chuckles of self-satisfaction when they win. They are passionately fond of gambling, and will never quit until they have lost their last dime or made a good stake.

WHAT?

Do You Think that "Jed" of The Chop House

Gives you a meal for nothing, and a glass of something to drink? "Not much" but he gives a better meal and more of it than any place in town for 25 cents. "That settles it."

Is It Not True?

There can be no argument as to the qualities essential to a perfect remedy for the ills arising from a disordered or inactive condition of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Everyone will admit that it should be perfectly safe for old and young of both sexes, at any and all times; that it should be acceptable both to the taste and the stomach; that it should never fail to act promptly and thoroughly, yet painlessly, and it should give strength to those organs. It is now well known that Syrup of Figs possesses those qualities in a pre-eminence degree. W. E. Dement & Co. are agents for Astoria, Oregon.
