 Gerhard Coleman was yesterday adjudged insane by a board of medical experts. He will be taken to Salem tomorrow.

It would be a good idea to half-mast the flags to-day in respect to the memory of Mr. C. Boelling, one of Astoria's oldest and staunchest pioneers.

On the eve of the presidential election last November Messrs. Gray and Haddock secured each a gold watch on the result of the ballot, and the vicissitudes that these watches have since passed through in a legal point of view, if detailed, be an interesting chapter in the history of attachments, garnishments, garnishers, garnishees, replies, writs, claims, recoveries, conveyances, proceedings, stays of proceedings, levies and various other little legal games. The last stage in the proceedings was reached yesterday morning when Sheriff Ross sold the brace of timepieces to Sam Harris for $22.50. They now adorn the walls of his wigwag.

COLLECTION DAY.

It was an American of Hibernian descent that said that black berries are always red when they are green. The 1st of the month is always collection day in Astoria, and yesterday being the first of the month, on account of the day before being Sunday, a goodly number of gentlemen were out with sacks and bundles of bills. The same thing occurred last month, when January 1st, though a regular collection day, was not observed on account of it being the first day of the year, and collections began on the 2nd. It will be the same way next month, because, as in February, the 1st day of the month being Sunday no well regulated business man will start collecting before daybreak Monday. March 1st. Just how it will be in April depends: the salmon season on the Columbia begins that day and prophecy always fails regarding anything in Astoria after the 1st of April. Collection day is an honorific custom handed down to us from the past and still perpetuated more in deference to an ancient tradition than for any resultant benefit. On the 1st of each month, or throughout the form of going around from store to office and office to shop is gone through with. It is a pleasant form of exercise for those who participate in it and is conducive to appetite, especially when the collector, after traversing sundry blocks, has collected enough to pay for a lunch. "Jeff" has begun to set out a lunch hot and free which in this connection, is duly appreciated for reasons which will suggest themselves to the fraternity of collectors. The trials of the collector, as related to an Astorian attaché yesterday, are numerous.

"Do you know," said the collector, as he brushed away a tear from his bright, blue eye, "that some people not toward a collector as though they thought he was a sort of inferior? They tell him to come again, when it is just as easy to pay him then as to make him repeat his visit; they say they haven't got the money, when they have; they dispute the bill, just to gain time and have the pleasure of deferring payment until another bill is made out; they keep him waiting and snarl at him when he presents his bill as though he was only made to be snarled at; as though he had down in his bill 'snarling, $2.50,' and that they were afraid they weren't taking snarling enough for the money."

"Then again," said the collector, as he shifted three or four rolls of twenty-dollar gold pieces from his side to his hip pocket, "people will tell you 'times are hard.' Now if you can tell me a surer way to make what every body seems to dread, to bring on hard times than to say it just for an excuse to keep from paying little bills, why I'll treat. The way to keep times from getting hard is to keep coin in circulation. The ten dollars that I paid you this morning I saw you give to another man who receipted his bill; that ten dollars he paid the grocer; the grocer, I know, passed it out right away, and I'll bet you that if that ten dollars was traced through Astoria to-day, it would be found that it paid $300 worth of debts; have a cigar?" and the collector got into a wagon bound for upper town. It is just possible that some of what that collector said may be so.

O'DONOVAN ROSSA KILLED.
 Shot Dead in His Office.
 SPECIAL TO THE ASTORIAN.
 New York, Feb. 2.—O'Donovan Rossa, the famous dynamiter, was shot and instantly killed in his office this afternoon. It was a woman who did it. The news has created intense excitement. Every expression of opinion is heard in regard to the killing. In numerous instances is heard the remark, "I'm glad of it."

THE REGULAR THING.
 SALEM, Feb. 2.—The senatorial ballot to-day resulted as follows: Prim, 34; Hirsch, 22; George, 1; G. H. Williams, 1; Dick Williams, 1; Hare, 9; Failing, 4; Hill, 7; Bonham, 1; absent, 4; blank, 1. It is now said in some quarters that if Hirsch gets 27 votes it will have the same effect as though a Republican caucus had been held and he were the caucus nominee.

THE ASTORIA CHARTER.
 The chamber of commerce charter amendment if it pass will be with the property qualification clause stricken out. The council charter is before the house this afternoon. Its friends have strong hopes of its carrying.

FAILURE.
 PORTLAND, Feb. 2.—E. Wineburg, a prominent merchant of this city, failed this morning.

THEATRICAL.
 The Grismer-Davies Troupe gave a fine representation of "Monte Cristo" last evening. As "Edmond Dantes," Mr. Grismer looked and acted the part throughout, and in his vicissitudes from imprisonment in the castle d'If, till his escape and reappearance as the rich count, the interest of the audience was kept up throughout. Miss Davies as Mercedes elicited the warmest commendation for her able rendition of that character. The two leading performers were fairly supported.

"Michael Strogoff," the great story on Russian life, from Jules Verne's story of that name, will be produced this evening. Mr. Grismer will assume the title role, as originally played by him. The following clipping is from the Bate City Mirror: "Michael Strogoff" abounds in thrilling situations, strong dialogues, witty repartee, and roaring comedy. The audience laugh, weep and applaud by turns, at the discomfiture of the English newspaper correspondents, the sufferings of Strogoff and his heroism of Nadia, Mr. Grismer, as Michael Strogoff, the courier of the czar, with the motto "For God, for the czar and for my country," was soldierly, prompt and intrepid. His self-assertion, his courage and his sacrifice were well depicted. From the time the czar dispatches him from Moscow across the snow clad mountains and the desert plains to Irkutsk, till his arrival at his destination, after doing battle, being taken prisoner by the Tartars, subjected to the torture of blinding by the red hot sword, of walking thousands of miles half starved and threatened by wolves and Tartars, with the one object of serving his master, the czar, he portrayed those qualities out of which Jules Verne created the character, patience, courage and endurance. Nadia Fedor, an orphan, played by Miss Phoebe Davies, was rendered with a just regard for truth and its effects. Her handsome face, her girlish figure and pathetic eyes won more hearts than Michael Strogoff's—for she was the favorite of all."

Death of Conrad Boelling.

Mr. Conrad Boelling, an old and honored resident of this city, died last Sunday evening of paralysis. He had had two strokes in the last year, and a few days before his death expressed the belief that he would soon have a third which, he believed, would be fatal. Deceased was born in Germany in 1803, and came to this country in 1845, arriving in Oregon in 1847, and in Astoria in 1849, being a continuous resident of this city for the last thirty-six years. In the year of his arrival he built and fitted up the old "Astoria hotel," then on the beach on the present site of the property corner Main and Concomly streets; this he was proprietor of for many years, but since his 70th year he relinquished active business life. He leaves a wife and six children, one of his daughters being the wife of Capt. Moses Rogers. Mrs. Flavel and her two daughters are now in San Francisco; the rest of his children and grandchildren are in this vicinity.

The Telephone Under Steam.

Captain U. R. Scott's new boat, the Telephone, steamed down the river Saturday to St. Johns for the double purpose of testing the machinery and taking on wood. The boat left the Washington street wharf at 7:40 a. m. and arrived at St. Johns at 8:10, making the distance in about an hour, one minute behind the Fleetwood's time. After loading, the Telephone moved down to the mouth of the Willamette, and after a stop the boat was turned toward St. Johns, the back trip, seven miles being made in twenty-eight minutes. The wheel is eight feet in diameter, and makes fourteen revolutions per minute, with four paddles in the water, two totally and two partially. The regular trip will be made in three weeks.—News, 1.

 I respectfully submit for the consideration of all concerned, might not the bell rung at the conclusion of the Sabbath morning service be omitted entirely; or at least postponed until each service, or sermon, in the other churches is concluded.

THE SALMON SEASON OF '85.

The fishing season of '85 does not give any promise of activity. The business of canning salmon on the Columbia has been carried on at a great disadvantage during the last two years and several cannermen are now undecided whether they will or will not run their establishments next summer. The last season was so disastrous to nearly every one connected with the business that a probability of similar conditions in '85 causes many to hesitate.

Lack of common purpose or settled unity of interests among the canners is not the least among the causes that operate to unsettle the business. There are about as many different ways of looking at the matter as there are canneries on the river. One man is now paying 25¢ cents a fathom to white men for knitting nets; another is employing Chinamen to do the same work for 10¢ cents; another firm is trying to set the price of salmon for the coming season at 60 cents, while a fourth insists that combined action will bring the fish to the price that he proposes to pay—35 cents. There seems to be a sort of division of interests this season that will result in separating those interested in the business into three classes: those who furnish money and take almost absolute control of the manufactured goods; those who get money advanced to them and work on the cooperative plan, and those who are what may be termed independent cannermen. To the last named belong such establishments as that of Mr. Jno. A. Devlin, J. O. Hantson, J. G. Megler, A. Booth; to the second belong such establishments as the Columbia Canning Co., West Coast, Union, White Star, Scandinavia, etc.; among the first mentioned may be enumerated W. T. Coleman & Co., D. L. Beck & Sons, Allen & Lewis.

Among these last named firms there seems to be a mutual objection this year to advance money to purchase supplies, and among the companies who usually obtain advances there also seems a mutual desire to get money elsewhere in a different way from heretofore. There was so much litigation and misunderstanding between agencies and Astoria factories in '84 that whatever is done this year will be greatly restricted. Each side has its own story, and is confident that the other side is in the wrong. Viewing the matter with an intent to be impartial, it would appear that on the part of the agencies there has been an effort to improve on a good thing and impose a little more that the business would bear; a desire to get two fingers in the pie; and on the other hand a distrust against capital thus employed that makes men ready to believe that a transaction that is not exactly understood, involves a swindle.

The present situation seems to suggest that the season of '85 will be characterized by several features differing from some former years. May fish will be fewer boats by 500 on the river; there will be fewer canneries in operation; there will be a lower price paid for fish; there will be fewer "outside" boats; fishing will not begin until before May 1st, and not till June 1st will there be anything like the old time activity; effort will be made to induce unanimity of sentiment among all interested in the business, and the struggle for supremacy on the part of "agencies" will not be characterized by such liberal concessions as in the past. The business must sooner or later settle down to a legitimate basis. It has been butchered and overdone and cannot for some years assume the proportions it did in '82, '83 and '84. Sooner of later the buyers of raw material will tire of paying high prices to the swarm of men who swoop down here every summer, stay for twelve or thirteen weeks, and then away with their earnings. In this connection it may be said that the cooperative companies have the best chance for survival if they can only realize that where their interests as catchers of fish and sellers of canned salmon clash, the greater profits lie in getting less price for the raw material that they may make more on the goods in the case.

But it would appear from circumstances now transpiring that the cooperative companies would be forced to the wall unless great care is observed and considerable business sagacity practiced. For several reasons the cooperative canneries are a help to Astoria and anything looking toward their continuance, if by that continuance the men that work could make money, would inure to the common prosperity of the place.

FIFTY YEARS OF LAW SUITS.

Sketch of a Famous Woman Who at Her Death was Legally Worth Two Hundred Million Dollars.

The death of Mrs. Myra Clarke Gaines at the age of seventy-nine, recalls the history of the most famous law suit in the nation. A brief history of the case is not without interest.

The mother of Mrs. Myra Clarke Gaines was a beautiful Creole. Her father was Daniel Clarke, an influential Irishman, owning large estates in Louisiana and much property in Philadelphia. It is asserted that they were secretly married in Philadelphia about 1800, but he never acknowledged his wife publicly. Myra was the second child of this union. She was born in 1806, in New Orleans. Clarke was sent to Washington as the first Louisiana delegate to congress, and his wife, learning that he was unfaithful, separated from him. He amassed great wealth and died in 1813, under circumstances which led to the belief that he had been poisoned. The will, leaving his wealth to Myra, was never found, but an aged negro in Clarke's service testified that he had seen his partner, a stern-looking gentleman after his death, and take from it a sealed document and burn it. When, some years later, the partner was told that Myra had declared in open court that her father had made this will and that it had been destroyed by an interested party, he exclaimed: "Great God! did she say that?" and throwing up his arms, died from apoplexy. Myra married William Whitney, a stern-looking gentleman from whom she learned of her rights and of her first title to property even then worth millions of dollars. She also learned that her mother still lived, and that her good name had remained after these years under a dark cloud. To see her mother and prove her marriage to her father was Mrs. Whitney's first thought. The beautiful home was abandoned and a few weeks later Mr. and Mrs. Whitney were living in New Orleans, and had taken the first plunge into the litigation. This was about 1832. She was at first successful, but her husband died of yellow fever, leaving her with three small children to fight out the contest. To legal opposition were added slanders about the character of the beautiful young widow, and even attempted assassination. For the sake of her children and her own name, she pressed the suits with vigor. But her means ran low. When she had finally reached a desperate strait, and was exposed to insult and poverty in New Orleans, she was befriended by General E. P. Gaines, the hero of Fort Erie, and an old friend of her father. He was her gallant protector, and she at length became his wife. She thereafter had the aid of the United States supreme court three times, on questions of practice, and at length, by compromise with one of the defendants, she gained a victory in 1848, the United States supreme court declaring that a marriage had taken place, and that Myra was entitled to four-fifths of Clarke's estate. But Mrs. Gaines found that to secure the property, she would have to bring suits against each of its owners in succession. Her suit against the executors reached a hearing in the supreme court in 1851. The defense was vigorous this time, and she found herself non-suited at the end of nineteen years, the cost of retaining its former decision as to the marriage of her mother. In 1849 her husband had died, and now, unaided, she again began suit under the will, which she was ready to sign, and in 1852 her rights were reaffirmed in the United States supreme court. The property, which includes the best parts of New Orleans, was then worth one hundred million dollars. But the judgments obtained by her in the supreme court of the nation simply decided her right to bring suit against the individual occupants of her property. The number was great. She pressed the one against the other, and in 1857 it was determined, in 1883, that the city was indebted to her in the sum of two millions of dollars. The long fight, however, wore her life out. In the course of the fifty years of litigation in which she was engaged, such men as Daniel Webster, Caleb Cushing, Charles O'Connor, Judah P. Benjamin, and others of the ablest lawyers of the age were employed in the case. Mrs. Gaines argued her own case before the United States supreme court against Daniel Webster, and won. She is described as a slender little woman, with brilliant eyes and vivacious manners, and was at once witty and eloquent in conversation. The great wealth to which she established her title will go to heirs who will, it is believed, accept compromise which she rejected, and thus end a celebrated case in American jurisprudence.

THE SENATORIAL SITUATION.

There is, says the News, a busy effort to treat Mitchell as though he were a candidate and kill him in effigy; but it is made ridiculous by the fact that his name has not been brought forward, and the further fact that it probably will not be. If, in the melange of uncertainties, it should come to the front, not all the smoldering embers of old abuse could be fanned into a living flame against it. It is pretty generally understood that a good man has been put out of the race, and the bitter hatred of friends, turned enemies, and this robe abusive statement of its effective sting. If there should ever be a break toward Mitchell, not all the sneaking ambuscades around the state house could avail to stop it. It would go like a prairie fire through and over all the cunning tricks to realize on the Mitchell strength, while hunting promises, and at the same time holding back an agreement, to turn forever from the old love. Something in the way of this is known, and it is contended. Not that Mitchell will be a candidate—for he probably will not be—certainly not through any act or wish of his own; but in the interests of fair dealing all around. It is curious to see how the Mitchell question enters into the race of every one else. The Hirsch men remember the candidate as a most loyal friend of Mitchell. The Hill men think of their candidate as the original enemy and tear-down of Mitchell. The Failing men think of their candidate as the prize-prize member of the anti-Mitchell clique.

BIDS FOR GOVERNMENT WORK.

Widely Different Views About the Value of Stone and Piles Delivered at Point Adams.

Following are the bids received by Capt. Chas. F. Powell, U. S. engineer, for 25,000 tons of stone for the government jetty at Point Adams:
 James Bays, Portland, 79¢, delivered at Tongue point.
 E. J. Jeffery, Portland, 55¢, delivered at Bagby Hole, thirty-five miles above Point Adams.
 James Frainey, Portland, 64¢, at Hungry Harbor (opposite Astoria); 54¢ at Bagby Hole.
 Elijah Corbett, Portland, $1.40 on cars at Fort Stevens.
 W. B. David, Portland, $1.20 at Astoria.
 Wm. L. Smith, Portland, $1.30 at Astoria.
 Brazil Grounds, Portland, $1.45 on barges at Point Adams.
 Oregon Pavement & Contract company, Portland, 85¢ at Astoria; 65¢ at Ellis point; 70¢ at Cathlamet.
 Wm. E. Holmes, Portland, 48¢ at Bagby Hole.
 James Neal, Portland, 82½¢ at Tongue point.
 Leander Michall, Dayton, Or., 65¢ at Point Adams.
 P. O'Neil, $1.28 at Hungry Harbor; $1.45 1/4 mile above Hungry Harbor; $1.40 at Tongue point.
 Vincent Cook, Portland, 62½¢ at Bagby's.
 J. J. Holland, Portland, 94¢ at Tongue point; 78¢ at Cathlamet point; 90¢ at Hungry Harbor.
 Chas. B. Martin, Astoria, $1.25, fifteen miles from Point Adams, on Washington territory side.
 Elijah Corbett, Portland, 90¢ near Cook's cannery.

It will be seen that each contractor named the place at which he would deliver the stone, and this partly accounts for the widely differing figures. The price mentioned is for a ton. For instance, W. E. Holmes' bid is 48 cents; Leander Michall's 65 cents. The former agrees to deliver the stone at Bagby Hole, about thirty-five miles above Point Adams, and the government estimates that it is worth 1 cent per ton per mile to tow it, which makes the bid equal to 83 cents; while Michall's bid for stone, delivered at the proposed work, is 65 cents. The highest bid is nearly 150 per cent. above this.

Following are the bids for 20,000 lineal feet of piles to be delivered at Point Adams:
 Brazil Grounds, Astoria, 9 cents per lineal foot.
 Leander Michall, Dayton Or., 64 cents.
 Ole Bowman, Seaside, 11 cents.
 J. H. D. Gray, Astoria, 7½ cents.
 Thos. Baxter, Vancouver, 7½ cents.
 J. C. Trullinger, et al., Astoria, 9 cents.
 P. F. Fallert, Kalama, 6 cents.
 All the bids have been forwarded to Washington—a summary by telegraph and a copy of the bids in full by mail—and the award will be made there.—Ore-gonian.
