

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON: SUNDAY, MARCH 9, 1885. DYING LEGISLATORS IN SENATORIAL ELECTIONS.

ILLINOIS has no patent on the pathetic scenes attending the pending contest. Dying members were carried into legislative chambers to give their votes in senatorial elections before either Logan or Morrison were born. Probably the earliest case of the kind occurred in the Missouri legislature. In 1820 the first general assembly met in St. Louis. The state had just been admitted, and besides the organization of the government, the election of two United States senators demanded attention. There was no capital. Sessions were held in one of the largest rooms in the old Missouri hotel, on Main and Morgan streets. Most of the members from out of town occupied rooms in the upper stories. Without any practical opposition or unnecessary delay the legislature elected David Barton as one of the senators. For the other place there was a scramble. Thomas H. Benton and John E. C. Lucas were the principal candidates, but there was enough scattering votes to prevent either of them from getting a majority. Besides the partisanship of politics there was a personal feud to lead bitterness to the contest. Only three years before Benton had killed the United States district attorney in a duel on Bloody island and his victim was a son of Judge Lucas. Benton's friends rallied and worked upon member after member. The last man won over was Marie Philippe Le Duc. He had been secretary to the last governor of the territory of Louisiana. Le Duc was greatly interested in some Spanish and mining claims. He was bitterly opposed to Benton and had said he had rather lose his arm than vote for him. Lucas had been the land commissioner and after the chief justice of the superior court of the territory. Le Duc was taken in hand by French friends, among them Agnate Chontean, Geo. Sarpy and Sylvester Labadie. They told him that Lucas, if elected, would certainly oppose the recognition of the claims and pointed to the Judge's course in territorial office as proof of this. They held out to him hopes if Benton was chosen. All one night Le Duc was labored with, he finally consented to vote for Benton notwithstanding his personal animosity. As soon as the Assembly met that morning Benton's friends rushed through a motion to proceed to balloting. They counted all of their men and found they still lacked one vote. In an upper chamber Daniel Ralls, a member from Pike county, lay dying. Physicians were consulted and restoratives provided. The sick man could not raise himself. As the call of the roll neared his name, four stout negro men took hold of the four corners of the bed and carried him, with a little disturbance as possible, down stairs and into the room, where the legislature was sitting. When his name was called Ralls whispered "Benton." He was immediately taken back to his room and shortly afterward died. Some of the most important legislation of that first session was the division of the portions of the state into counties. One of the first of these set apart was named Ralls, after the man whose vote had enabled Benton to enter upon his "thirty years in the American senate." It is, perhaps, worthy of mention that this is about all the memorial Ralls did receive. His remains were taken back to what was then Pike county, and buried on his farm. Years afterwards his descendants endeavored to discover the burial place in order to have the spot properly protected, but were not successful.

THE WHITE HOUSE. In taking possession of the White House Mr. Cleveland will find a complete record of every public transaction connected with the administration of the executive office, from the beginning of the first term of Grant down to the present time. The White house looks clean and bright and fresh. It has always been so since Arthur has had possession. Toward the close of previous administrations there was a great scurrying about, and paper-hangers, upholsterers and scrub-women were more plentiful, even than the politicians. With the incoming of the Arthur regime there came new methods and a different order of things. The tone of the place was perceptibly elevated. It was like entering a gentleman's private dwelling. Up to the time of the war there was no method or regularity in the conduct of the business at the White house. The president, with the exception of his private secretary, had little or no clerical force around him, and most all the details of the business requiring executive attention or supervision were performed by clerks in the different departments. This was unsatisfactory and inconvenient, and before Lincoln's death congress provided some additional clerical force for the White house proper. The staff of clerks was further increased under Andrew Johnson, and during the two terms of Gen. Grant additions were made until the White house staff was brought to a condition of efficiency. Now the work connected with the duties of the executive office are performed under the same roof with the president and under his direct superintendence. The clerical staff of the white house consists of a private secretary at $3,250, an assistant secretary at $2,250, two clerks at $2,000 each, two at $1,800 each, two at $1,600 each, one at $1,400, one at $1,200, and a telegraph operator at $1,400. Then there is a steward at $1,800, an usher at $1,400, eight messengers and door-keepers at $1,200 each, a watchman at $900, and a furnace-keeper at $864. Civil service reform principles have rather been the rule at the white house during the last twenty years. The changes have been mostly for good cause, or when the occupant was provided with something better. General Grant and Mr. Hayes, for instance, both put some of the white house staff into life positions in the army. One of the present clerks at the white house was appointed by Mr. Lincoln, and others were put there by General Grant. The force is faithful and efficient, and although it has put things into such good order new hands would perhaps not experience any great difficulty in running the machine. Mr. Cleveland can probably find no better place to enforce his civil service ideas than right under his own roof.

The first official act of President Cleveland was the nomination of his cabinet, and his second was to append his signature to the commission of U. S. Grant as an officer on the retired list of the army with the rank of general. In the senate, on the 6th inst., all the cabinet nominations were confirmed without debate or division and by a unanimous vote. MARRIED. In Astoria, March 1st, 1885, by Rev. J. W. McCormac, Miss Maria Karkie to Jacob Pantajo.
