When I was a boy, says Mr. Geo. C. Stone, manager of the Vermillion Iron mines, to a representative of The Miller, and that was forty years ago—I became a clerk in a hardware There wasn't a knife, a pin, a lock, a door knob, a hinge, for sale of American make. Everything came from England. The pins were made of two pieces, one little bit of wire being wound around the head of the pin. It often slipped off and became an unmitigated nuisance. The solid-headed pin of to-day is an American institution, and it took a Yankee to make the machine that not only makes it, but sticks it into the paper Is just what its name implies; a makes it, but sticks it into the paper it is sold on. The keys in those days for large door locks were huge crowbars six or eight inches long, and weighing a pound or more.

> The only excuse that Europeans higher civilization. The French fleet is represented as killing the crews of trading junks and inhumanly treating prisoners. The China Mail says that eaptives taken from these trading unks are taken to Keelung, where they are kept without food or drink until they are unfit for work, when they are killed. Probably this is an exaggeration, but there is little doubt that Christian warfare is about as barbarons as the warfare of barba rians. In Sou an the English burn the villages of the natives, and then wonder that the natives oppose their coming.
