The story is told, and it is good as a story, that the French sent their officials through the country with instructions to ascertain the recent structions to ascertain the names of the rivers, mountains, ruins, etc. On the completion of the map a very large proportion of the places were found to bear the name "Ma'arifsh." The proportion was unnaturally large, and it was strange that ruins and rivers and mountains should all be called "Ma'arifsh." Yet all the explorers solemnly assured the authorities that upon addressing the natives out of their phrase book in the set sentence, "What is the name of that place?" the Berber, or Zlass, or other Arab had replied, "Ma'arifsh."

1s just what its name implies; a Purely Vegetable Compound, that

These mountains and rivers and objects of interests were, in fact, all labelled with the interesting name (in Arabic) "Don't know." "River Don't know," the Don't know mountains, Oned Ma'arifsh, Diebel Ma'arifsh.
