He went into de-tails to show him what a hard lot the Baltimoreans were, and ampeared to Baltimoreans were, and appeared to know them all intimately. The governor listened with all his ears, occasionally welling "Yes!" or "No." into the horn of the visitor's ear-trumpet, and never sug-gesting that he had had about enough of it. Presently Col. Lamont, who had been sympathizing with his chief, had occasion to leave the room. As he passed in the rear of the governor his excellency still seemed intent on the old man's recital, seemed intent on the old man's recital, never taking his eyes from his face, but as the private secretary got directly behind him he heard his familiar voice say in a wearisome aside: "Dan this is the worst racket I ever struck." But the visitor was innocent of all suspicion, and Cleveland listened patiently until he finished.

SPECIAL TO THE ASTORIAN. LONDON, April 15.-The war feeling is less demonstrative to-day; Russia has got through furnishing explanations to the English government and is now in turn asking England to explain what English staff officers were doing in Afghan, it being a matter easily proved that there were several English officers at the battle on the Murghaub.

We give space to the "Presidential magic square," one of the most unique and profitable puzzles that has ever been presented to the public. The idea of this presidential magic square is original with Alfred Jones, of Washington, Indiana, and occurred to him before Lincoln's election in 1860. He has waited about twenty-five years for the elections subsequent to that time to complete the square, and the inauguration of Cleveland has made this strange and instructive square perfect. As will be seen by examining the square the name of the first president of this great country is placed in the square below the center square, together with the year of his inauguration and by rule all the other squares are filled up. Now, who will be the first one to fathom or decipher this rule? The curious feature of this square is that if you add any column to the right or left, up or down, or take the sum of the diagonals the result in every case is 9.185. And the small numbers in the squares indicating the number of the administration, when added in the same manner, gives a result in every case of 65. Here is the presidential magic square. There is much valuable information to be obtained from this presidential magic square, and as a matter of reference it will do to clip and paste in your scrap book. Young people just beginning the study of United States history should paste it in the back of their school history.

A Wrickle-Destroyer Which Defles Time and Preserves Beauty.

While there is little beauty in obesity there is a great deal in a limited amount of fat, which, like charity, covers a multitude of imperfections. Fat is a veritshle godsend to homely women, for it covers up the bones, rounds off the sharp angles, and gives a solidity to the figure that is at once attractive and commanding. A plump woman may require a 634 glove, but her hand looks much smaller than that of a lean woman which may be covered with a No. 5. Another advantage of fat, and a condition, too, of vital importance to womanhood, is the resistance it offers to age. Fat people never look old, and positively refuse to get wrinkled. A fat woman at 45 is brighter and fresher than a Sally Brass at 28, for she has not that pleasing rotundity which— barring the purely artistic eye—is re-freshing to contemplate. Fat people may not live any longer than their skinny, bony neighbors, but while they do live they are healthier, hap-pier and handsomer, if not wittier and wiser. By fat here is not meant that su rabundance of animal tissue which personnance of animal tessale which prevails among the butchers and beer-dealers of the city. In such instances fat is only attended with high color, lazy and indolent disposition, and sluggish emotions, but is the burden that two legs seem insufficient to support.

It is one thing to get fat but it is quite another problem to remain in that blissanother problem to remain in that dissiplul condition and neither subside into leanness nor run up into corpulency. Between the two evils it is difficult to choose. Unlike men, fat women are almost always flabby, from the fact that they can do little muscular work and will not exercise. On the other hand, the fat woman who permits her greatness to depart might as well bury herself, for, like Lady Jane, little will be left of her the coming by and by. While her fat lasted she was wrinkle proof, but the moment her lymphatic temperament drops she becomes one big wrinkle, and the loose, empty skin hangs like a fluted drapery from temple to toe. Women who study their glass intelligently are aware of this and will risk their fortune aware of this and win risk their fortune and their very lives to avoid any such re-action, there being only one thing that a cultured woman dreads more than wrin-kles—and that is the small-pox. The first thing that a woman of the world does after the

That follows youth with flying feet is gone, is to get fat, and, as in every scheme at which she sets her wits, she

In the process of flesh-building every thing depends upon the food, which must consist largely of carbonates, as, for instance, mutton, wheat, rye, butter. corn, pess, rice, potatoes and milk. Est abundantly of fat meats, vegetables with rich gravy and sauces, and sweet fruits, drink all of the good milk you can get and scorn tea and coffee. It is quite a well-known fact that with a life of case and plenty of als one can fatten up in three months' time. Where there is an antipathy to such beverages, depend on milk and cream, of which drink a gallon a day, combining a quart of cream with the milk. Avoid acids of all kinds, also the milk. Avoid acids of all kinds, also pickles, spiced food, table sauces, mustards and like condiments. For dessert soorn all pastries, such as pie-crust, rolls tarts, and the indigestible dampling. Custards, patties, blanc mange, marmalades, sago, rice, tapioca, and bread puddings will be found nutritious, likewise raisins, figs, candied fruits, apples, grapes, all kinds of preserves and jellies, and sugar in any shape. Cod-liver oil and fresh-drawn blood are also incentives to fat which should not be overlooked, for a glass of the former and a quart of warm blood right from the slaughtered cow before breakfast would cause Sarah cow before breakfast would cause Sarah Bernhardt herself to puff ont like a cot-ton-ball in three weeks.

Let it be remembered that it is quality rather than quantity that conducive to fat. Gormandizing is not only unnecessary but absolutely pernicious to anybody desirous of being healthy. The digestive organs must be kept in a constant state of activity, which cannot exist when the stomach is overloaded. Drink shundartly, whether of broths, soups, water or milk. Never use ice-water at meals, as such a drink chills the sys-tem and arrests digestion. Bathe freely but avoid extremes of temperature—since but avoid extremes of temperature—since cold water shocks and hot water weakens the nerves. Always take a warm bath before retiring; sleep enough and on a soft bed, and look well to the perfect ventilation of the room. If the weather is cold, sponge the entire body with giverine, almond or olive oil, and keep the feet warm by the same process.

Flagellation is another good thing used by the old slave-dealers, and still practiced by the Arabs, who flog their slaves to make them plump for market. If this treatment does not increase the flesh it will be the means of exciting the circulation at the surface and giving tone to the largerid suppose. to the languid muscles. Live much in the open air, but let the exercise be light; re-frain from excessive labor, moderate the pleasures, adopt a simple and regular mode of life, keep the mind trained and contented—and if you do not find your-self expanding abandon the scheme and prepare to take your place among those who are lean and lank through the laws of heredity. In a little book on digestion Dio Lewis

"If you want to get fat, here is the se-cret in a sentence: Go to bed early, get up late, drink water on rising, before retiring, and gallons during the day."
