How Coral Islands Grow.

Capt. Chimmo, of the British navy: First it makes a break or ripple on the surface; something is then drifted and entangled on it-maybe a log of wood, a dead tree, a mass of weed; then birds bring their food of fishes, seeds, etc., and leave the bones there; sand, gravel and broken shells acoumulate around it, and it begins to appear above the water. Seeds drifting on the ocean are next arrested in their progress; dead wood, decayed leaves, fishbones form a sod; the seed germinates, and rapidly, too, with the heat and rains of the tropics—generally the mangrove; this becomes a legister what its name implies; a Tumblers Decanters, and All bush, then a tree, its roots grasp the Purely Vegetable Compound, that bush, then a tree, its roots grasp the surrounding soil, and it becomes the nucleus of a mangrove island, waiting for some passing discoverer to name it! I have watched with real interest the progress of these islets from year to year, the first ripple, then the collection of leaves, sand and shells, then the first shoot of the mangrove, then the sea-shells, the hermit crub and the surface ocean shell, all soon to become a coral island.

A new locomotive turned out the other day at Albany on her trial trip, attained a speed of over seventy at the sea-shell speed of over seventy at the sea-shell speed of over seventy at the sea-shell speed of over seventy at the sea-shells, the liver must be kept in order."
