A DOUBLE LIFE.

The remarkable career of Robert Schuyler is almost incredible. Born of an old and aristocratic family in New York, he went into business and greatly increased his patrimony. He also increased his matrimony; for he was captivated by a beautiful girl of Yonkers, and made her his wife, under the single condition that she must never be admitted into his social circle or introduced to any member of his family. He told her his name was Spicer, and that was the name borne on the marriage certificate. He fitted up an elegant house on Amity street, and there he and Mrs. Spicer lived happily for years. She had her own circle of friends in her relatives and acquaintances, but he was shy of them. He lived for fifteen years two distinct lives in this city—about as distinct as if he had been two individuals. In realizing one of these lives he was the generous and respected Mr. Spicer—the affectionate husband and indulgent father of Amity street; in realizing the other, he was the handsome and wealthy Robert Schuyler of Wall street—the elegant bachelor—who danced at the Jay's, and went to dinner parties at the Lorillard's and Astors', and whom woldly-minded maidens set their caps to catch. He slept on Amity street, and was there one of the pillars of the church, which he always attended with Mrs. Spicer and the children. At Delmonico's he was known only as Schuyler, the able financier, grandson of Gen. Phillip Schuyler, whom Washington loved and trusted. Old society tabs teased him about his single singularity, and his friends guyed him for so disrespecting the example of Gen. Phillip, who, I believe left thirteen living likenesses of himself.

Schuyler throve wonderfully in Wall street. He became a millionaire. He was a confidant of Vanderbilt. He was elected president of the New York & New Haven railroad company. About that time, I have been told, two young men, one being his son Dan Spicer, met this duplex man on Broadway. Both recognized him, and both bowed.

"I didn't know you knew him, Dan," said one.

"Nothing strange about that," answered the other, glibly. "I ought to know him, considering that he is my father."

"Your father!" repeated the other, in astonishment; "it can't be; that's Mr. Schuyler—Robert Schuyler—and I know he isn't married."

"Schuyler—not much!" retorted his companion. "That's Mr. James G. Spicer, and he's my father. I hope I know. Let's turn around and I'll introduce you to him."

The curiosity of the first speaker now being aroused, they turned about and walked after the fine, tall figure, now below the city hall.

"I know him by the shape of his shoulders and his walk," insisted he, "as well as by his face. Why, he comes up to our house and plays billiards with my father every few nights, and he attends our parties."

They had gained on the gentleman as they walked, and were quite near him when he met another coming in the opposite direction who said, shaking hands, "Good morning, Schuyley! Stocks are a bit shaky this morning, but your lines are firm." The boys walked past them unnoticed, but Dan was set to thinking.

As a matter of fact, Schuyler's lines were not as "firm" as they seemed. He had already been nipped in several transactions, and to make himself good he had issued illegal bonds of the New Haven road and sold them. His affairs getting more and more tangled, he resorted to the relief more and more, till at last he had created an indebtedness of some two million dollars, sold the bond and used or kept the money. He prepared for flight, and started for Europe one summer evening. Just before absconding he got time to run home (no longer in Amity street, but a handsome residence on Twenty-second street near Eighth avenue, still known as "the Schuyler mansion"), and there he revealed himself to his wife—his name and his crime. He put his family in charge of a friend—Courtlandt Palmer, I have been told—and bade good-bye to America forever. His family joined him in Paris, where they suddenly became Schuylers; there the children were educated, and there, some years since, Mr. Robert Schuyler-Spicer, went the way of all the living—dust to dust. His body was entombed at Pere la Chaise; but his widow had the body disinterred, frozen in ice, and brought back home. Determining to escape the galling notoriety that a disclosure of his identity at quarantine would have caused, she bribed stewards and inspectors, who hid the body in a roll of carpet and so carried it ashore. In the twilight three men were seen bearing a heavy roll of carpeting up the high steps of the old Schuyler mansion. Curious neighbors watched the burden from the opposite windows, and loungers regarded it from the sidewalks; but there was no suspicion of its identity, though somebody may have remarked, "They are going to refurnish the Schuyler mansion for a hotel, I'll bet, That carpet must be Mosquette, rolled tight."

I believe the burial took place under some third name—neither Schuyler nor Spicer. Two of the children of this strange double life live in New York City now. It was Goldsmith who said, "There is no solitude more dreadful than a great city"; and Emerson says, "If you would know and not be known, dwell in a great city."—W. A. Croffut, in Pioneer Press.

The Modoc Independent says that a company has been organized in Modoc county for the purpose of constructing a canal to tap Goose Lake and conduct its waters into Pitt river, thence over the sage brush lands in that valley and by this means to furnish adequate means for irrigating a large quantity of now useless land, and at the same time to reclaim several thousand acres of swamp land lying along the shores of Goose Lake. At the upper end of the lake there are 20,000 acres of land, and at the lower end there are 20,000 acres which can be drained and thus brought into use. The water will follow the channel of Pitt river to a point about six miles above Alturas, where a ditch will be started and follow the foothills around the north of the valley, the ditch to be increased in length as the demand of water requires.

Thirty-six of Joseph's band of Nez Perces, which are permitted to return from Indian territory, are to be located on the Colville reservation. It is supposed that they were the ringleaders in the massacre of the whites on Salmon river in '77, and that they prefer to place themselves at a safe distance from the indictments for murder which are hanging over them in Nez Perce county, Idaho. Major Waters was not informed in the dispatch whether or not Chief Joseph would be among the number. The remainder of the band will be located on the Nez Perce Reserve. Of the 500 who were captured by General Miles and kept in exile for over seven years, only about one-half are left to return, and they are thoroughly broken in spirit.

A dispatch from Kamloops to the Victoria Times, dated April 14th, says that a strike of 4,000 men took place on the C. P. railroad in the Selkirk range on April 1st. No work was allowed to go on east of the second crossing of the Columbia. The men demanded their pay from last December up to the end of March, and that in future a regular monthly pay day be established. They sent word to Mr. Wright, in Eagle Pass, that they had no desire to interfere with his work, as he paid his men. They even stopped the bridge work which was going on over the Columbia river.

"Richelieu" Robinson, whose burly form will not be seen on the floor of the house for an indefinite time after inauguration day, relates an amusing incident in which he was the chief actor. More than forty years ago he took out his first papers for citizenship. The clerk repeated the usual formula, which required the applicant to renounce allegiance to all other governments, and concluded without ever making a pause, "but especially to the queen of Great Britain and Ireland so help you God give me a dollar." "Pardon me, sir," Mr. Robinson said, "but shouldn't you have put a comma between God and the dollar?"

Walks about Town.

To look at the various fellow-beings we meet in the streets is an interesting study. Queer people some of them are. Some are proud of their clothes, while some shuffle along in tatters. Some are cheerful, others are melancholy. Some have a light and happy step, others plod on as if marching to the grave. What a good thing it would be to give each of the sad and weary ones a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters! How it would nerve them up and make them know the blessing of hearty health! Mr. Schutt of Kiel, Wis., says, "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of general ill health."

Some of the farmers in southern Oregon who have been stall feeding beef cattle since last fall, find to their loss that they have over estimated the demands of the local beef market. They are now anxious to sell their fat cattle at a reduced price, and some have even turned the beeves out upon the range again after having fed them grain all winter.

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

In Pulmonary Affections and Scrofulous Diseases.—DR. IRA M. LANG, New York, says: "I have prescribed Scott's Emulsion and used it in my family and am greatly pleased with it. Have found it very serviceable in Scrofulous diseases and Pulmonary affections."

The attitude and temper of the miners' union at the Wood river mines so menaces the peace of the district and the safety of property, that an additional fore of troops with effective arms have been sent there to assist the local authorities. Sixty members of the Bradford union have been arrested and been placed under $20,000 bonds each.

Washed-Out Hair.

There is a sort of pallid, chalky complexion which the novelists call a "washed-out complexion." It is ghastly enough, and no mistake. Washed-out, faded, discolored, or parti-colored hair is almost as repulsive and melancholy. Parker's Hair Balsam will restore your hair to its original color, whatever it was; brown, auburn or black. Why wear moss on your head, when you may easily have lively, shining hair.
