The Daily Astorian.

ASTORIA, OREGON:

THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

THE reelection of John A. Logan ninth congress. The legislature of a year of actual wealth. Oregon will not again meet until the first Monday in January, 1887. The forty-ninth congress will expire by limitation of law on the 4th of March

The senate of the forty-ninth congress will contain forty-two Republican senators, including the two from Virginia, against forty in the last body stood forty-two Democrats, thirty-three Republicans and one Independent-David Davis. It was the only senate since the war in which Democrats had control. Republicans since the date stated have been gaining on the Democrats. The Grim Sergeant often also plays a part in remodeling the senate. When he beckons one of these statesmen away, the governor of his state fills the vacancy. Two years ago that dread personage was on the side of the Republicans, for the governors of nearly all the northern states were Republican, while in the south they were Democrats. The preponderance was, therefore, on the side of the Republicans, in case a Democratic northern senstor died. This time the Democrats have possession of several northern states. For instance, if a senator from California or New York should die the governor would appoint a Democrat to the vacancy.

The senators from the north who will derive their titles from the governors of their states, will be reinforced, probably, by three senators from the south of like origin. Three senators of the present congress have entered the cabinet of President Cleveland. They are Bayard of Delaware, Garland of Arkansas and Lamar of Mississippi. It is to be regarded as a coincidence that Cleveland takes three of his cabinet from the senate, as did also the late President Garfield. Seats at the council board of the president seem to be the only promotion now open to senators. Though often candidates for the presidency they are seldom preferred Garfield was a senator, but he had the curious fortune of being at one and the same time a representative, a senator and a candidate for the presidency. He never sat as a senator. James Buchanan was the last president who had been in the senate previously. It is something creditable to the governors who, by the mischances and arrangements, to which reference is above made, have acceded to the power of their legislatures in the matter of making a selection for these coveted places-seats in the senate of the United States-that none of them so far have tried to appropriate the windfall themselves, though it must be said that the end is not yet. But the thing is as easy as rolling off a log. All that is necessary is for the governor to resign on the understanding that his heir-apparent, who in some states is lieutenant-governor and in others is secretary of state, shall appoint him to the vacant place. There have been many sharp corners turned in politics. It is perhaps a subject for marvel that no attempt of that kind has so far been made in these cases, especially when the attractive character of the prize is considered. Next to the presidency, a seat in the senate is most desired by those who have a vessming for public life. For a really yearning for public life. For a really able man the senate is, perhaps, the preferable place. The president is the great High Almoner. He has immense stores of nice things to give away. But that is a thankless business, as all presidents know. The senator who has the ability and the talent can mold the policy of the government and make history. If Webster had achieved his later ambition his fame as a president would most probably not have equaled his fame as a senator, for there would not in the former place have been the same chance for the display of his dazzling oratorical powers.

In no country in the world, says to the senate of the United States di- It proves that our average population the stream they saw the tug Neptune rects national attention to the only lives well. And this is an important going out, and halling her were taken in existing vacancy—that from this state.

If Governor Moody is wise he will appoint and not trust to the probabilities of an extra session. There will be several senators in the next congress who will receive their appointments from the governors of their states. This results from the practice coming into vogue of a new administration selecting cabinet officers from the senate, and also from a failure on the part of one legislature to elect and the probability that another legislature will be no more of civilization or retrograde depends on our living. It is also a test of our capted waves, and sending their little capped waves. another legislature will be no more business and trading plants at least successful. The Republicans won as much more; $20,000,000,000 a year over them, capsizing the boat and sending the fishermen struggling into the two senators in the presidential electrones a large sum. It means an two senators in the presidential election in which they were defeated—one in California and one in Oregon.

The senator who will derive his title from the governor will sit through—

They shouted and shouted till house, but no response came. Both were so benumbed they could bardly speak. Slowly the tide took them near the Seal Rocks. It was then about midnight. Off a little way—so near it seemed to them—they saw the outline of a sailing versel going in the Gatt. Again, with all their fast-failing strength they called and shouted for help, but in vain, for the offline was soon lost to sight.

Emersen made no reply. In a minute he put his head down close to the keet, then his hands let go and he was gone. His companion did not see him again. Clausen felt that he could not hold on much longer either, he was so cold and stiff, when suddenly he was thrown violently off the boat and then he felt sand under him. He kept en int darkness, meeting no one and seeing few houses. He stumbled, slipped and fell occasionally, but plodded on until about daybreak he reached the outer line of Clay street. It was 7 o clock when he rapped at the door of his lodgings at 53 Clay street. He was nearly ready to drop with fatigue. His clothes were still wet and covered with sand and dirt. He took some hurried refreshments and went to bed. He said he felt as though he wanted to sleep for a year. He is only about twenty-five, with the typical ruddy, florid countenance of the Norwenian. Emersen was an old shipmate, a Dane, about thirty years old and single. He was formerly in the navy and is said to have been a steady young man with many commendable quarities.—S. F. Bulletin, 16.

Everybody is complaining of the depression prevailing in all the avenue of commerce and industry.

THE CAUSES

that brought hard times to our doors, are manifold; overproduction may be mentioned as the chief factor, but the

is, how can we avert a general bust up? It is evident that something must be done, and done soon. Simple talk wont help. We must not indulge in luxuries, we must economise and be careful.

If you are in need of anything, inquire for prices; don't trade in a certain slove because Mr. Jones or Mrs. Brown do, think for your self. Now, for instance if we offer
