

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON: WEDNESDAY, JUNE 17, 1885. MORMONS GOING TO MEXICO.

The present Mormon situation have planned, and have in part executed, a scheme for the removal of a part of the Mormon people to Mexico. The Mexican laws are as stringent against polygamy as those of the United States. But, until recently, for a period of thirty years, polygamy has been tolerated in Utah by the United States notwithstanding the laws against it. Doubtless the sagacious Mormon hierarchy anticipate a long period of non-interference by the Mexican authorities in their peculiar institution. -Yesterday's Oregonian.

47,700 frames. In all this there is absolutely no exaggeration whatever, unless it be in the lady's tastes. Let our government subsidize fashionable French millinery, dry goods and haberdashery shops, all through Mormondom, with an emporium of fashion at the city of the Great Salt Lake. Let French bonnets be introduced at figures within the reach of the poorest Mormon girl. Let twelve-button kid gloves and real laces, kid gaiters and silk stockings, be supplied for, say five years at nominal prices, till the taste is educated and the fashion established. Let combs and village carts with ratchet harness be made fashionable. Let it become necessary for Mormon society to visit summer resorts. Let pews be rented in the Mormon tabernacles, and require them to be upholstered, the aisles carpeted, and the prayer-books to have golden clasps. Let Easter bonnets and mourning habiliments be made to conform with the requirements of fashion. Let it be the proper caper to air Mormon babies in spring carriages, dressed in dainty long clothes of linen and lace. Let fashionable parties and receptions be introduced. Let the German with its costly favors, become the rage. Let the menus at dinner parties become high-priced gifts. Let it become essential that the Mormon girl should acquire French, learn music, and be graduated at a female seminary. Let it become her sole ambition in life to have a fashionable wedding with bridal frock en train and trousseau from Paris, when she marries her chosen one. If the average Mormon can support more than one such wife; if the Mormon youth can face more than one such helpmeet; if Mormonism can carry this load and not break down under it—then Mormonism is founded upon that rock against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. If Mormonism could survive the domestic shed involved in the propositions of several fashionable wives and lady's maids and nursery maids in common, with a cook to rule the kitchen, and only one man to keep the peace and pay the bills, then it possesses a vitality which neither religious prejudice, nor political persecution, nor laws of congress, nor decrees of courts, can in any wise affect. Mormonism is dangerous only so long as it shall preserve the simplicity, economy, and industry which have so far characterized its early history. Nor are we quite prepared to say that a religion is altogether bad which encourages industry, economy, and sobriety, which built a city in which there were no houses of prostitution, no gambling halls, and no liquor saloons; which had no criminals, nor paupers, nor idlers in its streets; which encouraged schools; which from the desert made small farms to blossom with grain and fruits; which established homes of order and plenty, and which took the ignorant, and the striving, toiling poor from English mine and northern quarry, and gave them air, and light, and freedom in a mountain home. We do not palliate nor excuse the Mountain Meadow massacre, nor any crime done by Mormon authority. If organized Mormonism opposes the administration of the law, we could not justify the act. We are not defending Mormonism, nor drawing parallels and while we do not assent the plural wife system from the moral side, we do condemn it as in opposition to law and to the code of civilization which is, whether better or worse than that of earlier ages and oriental lands, the civilization of our age and the moral code of our American land and people. If Mormonism would be American, let it wheel into line of sympathy with American institutions by recognizing only the monogamic relation. In going to Mexico the Mormons exhibit excellent taste.
