A Colorado paper tells how, not long since, a Union Pacific train chased a wolf five miles, and then the wolf fell down and the train ran over it. We believed all of that except the part about the train eatching the wolf. It may have chased it for five miles, or five thousand miles but it never caught it—unless indeed, the wolf got tired of life, or stopped to kill a horse or rob a hen-roost, or something of that sort, or started to go back down the track after something it had left, But the idea that a U. P. train ever caught anything that had legs and could crawl, and did crawl, and kept on crawling, is absurd.
