At a murder trial in Lancaster, S S., recently, one witness admitted that he had been drinking on the day of the murder. He said that he "felt it some, but not in a romantic, extor-tionate way." Another witness said he executed "a rainbow curve' in coming to the scene of the tragedy. His horse he described as "a sitting bias-wise across the street." Being cross examined, he said to the sol-"I am a master-drinker. I can out-drink you." But the great-est sensation was produced by a witness who stated that he refused to take a drink when invited by one of the parties to the difficulty. This caused "incredulous laughter in the court-room."
