They were hospitably received by Mrs. Feaster and Marie, and finally revealing their identity, were concealed in the house until Sherman entered, when they bespoke the protection of the federal army for their fair enter-tainers. When Sherman's forces left Columbia Mrs. Feaster and

MARIE BOOZER FLED WITH THEM, officer high in command, who supplied all her wants. On arriving at New York they stopped at the Everett house. As Marie alighted from the carriage on the first night of her arrival, Mr. John Beecher, who was standing in the vestibule of the hotel, saw her and fell desperately in love with her. Learning that she and her mother were "refugees from the south who had been devoted to the Union," he offered them every assistance. A fine house on Washington heights was placed at their disposal, and in a few months he proposed to Marie and was accepted. After they were married they moved to Mr. Beecher's Fifth street man-sion, where she entertained royally. Mrs. Beecher's breakfasts, luncheons marie, the countess, was quite a little child, when her father died suddenly, and rumor had it that nature had little to do with his taking off. In a few months the widow consoled herself with another husband, a man by the name of Boozer, much older than herself, but possessed of great wealth. By an ante-matrimonial arrangement, Marie assumed the name of Boozer, and the old gentleman gave her a handsome annuity, which her mother expended in personal adornment. Not long after this second marriage, Mr. Boozer was induced to make a will, whereby he

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters not only far transcends in purity the ordinary unmedicated stimulants of commerce, the cheap local bitters, and eye openers vended as tonics, but where they are powerless to do more than impart a tempory stimulus to appetite, the Bitters restores digestion, remedies billousness and insures regularity in the habit of body. It is, therefore, a tonic in the true sense of the word, for does it not renew harmony of tone in the most important functions of the body, where all before was discordant, feeble and inharmonious? Besides this, its invigorating and regulating effects constitute it the best possible safectuard against malarial diseasese. It conquers rheumatism, kidney complaints and nervousness,
