Every telegraph operator in the United States has in his office a subscription paper and is authorized to receive subscriptions for the Grant monument.

The paper in the Astoria telegraph office is not a very imposing affair as yet.

A large number at Ilwaco having expressed a desire to see "The Private Secretary" at Ross' opera house on the 17th, Capt. Gray states that if a sufficient number apply he will make a special trip that evening at excursion rates, taking the Ilwacoites and those from the cape back at the conclusion of the performance.

WHY THE WILMINGTON DREW OUT. Frank Bernard & Co. are agents for the Wilmington and other steamers.

"What is the reason," was asked at the office "that the Wilmington did not sail on August 5th, as previously announced?"

"Well, there's been an entire change of programme. The Wilmington will probably now lie at the dock here all summer. Can't say just why the steamer drew out, but she won't run."

"That knocks out a good many Portland people, who have been figuring on cheap fares. It will be a disappointment to them."

"That's what we understand, but I hear they expected $5 fares from port to port. We couldn't have done that. The best we could have done would have been $3 and $16, the same as we charge from the Sound."

"The only reasonable inference is that the other steamship companies have paid the Wilmington to stay off the route." - Portland News San Francisco Correspondence.

Concert. The Congregational church choir will give a concert at the opera house, on Thursday evening, Aug. 13. They will be assisted by some of the leading musical talent of Astoria, also Prof. Francis, Miss Lizzie Anderson and others of Portland. Tickets are placed at fifty cents. Reserved seats at the City book store without extra charge. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the church. Box sheet will open Tuesday morning.

AT REST. THE GRANT OBSEQUIES IN ASTORIA.

A Nation for Fall Breviers: For Honours A Continent.

Not till the clouds of clay fall on the coffin of one we love do we realize the fullness of our grief, and though two weeks had passed since the lightning flashed across the continent the sad news "Grant is dead," it was not till yesterday that the American people realized to their fullest the loss they had sustained in the death of the man who in life was the preserver of the Union, and in death is the common inheritance of a united nation.

When to his grave the good man goes it is with satisfaction that his eulogist records his virtues; when mother earth receives him who, weary of the world's greatness, stands with outstretched arms toward the shoreless sea, his greatness is recounted and his littleness accorded the charity of silence; but when he was both good and great, when a man who, like Grant, was born for his country, never narrowed his mind, nor to party gave up what was meant for mankind; when such a man is laid away, earth's remotest corners should sound with the echo of his fame.

As while the dead chieftain is past all need of praise, yet we on this far off western verge of the American Union, pluck a spray of simple life to throw upon the grave of Grant, and though costlier floral emblems lie in rich profusion of bud and blossom above the hero's breast, no warmer token of affectionate remembrance goes out to his honored memory than that Astoria sends.

Yesterday the heavens were hung in black; southerly winds rolled in from the Pacific; the streets were silent; the half-masted flags flapped heavily on every housetop, on the ships in the stream and the spires of the buildings and one and all had but one thought, "General Grant is to be buried in New York to-day."

From the east came telegrams all the morning. At ten o'clock, New York time, came one that briefly said, "The Grant funeral procession has started. At half past twelve came another which set in front of the procession has just entered Riverside drive; the distance to the park is two and a-half miles." Finally came one that said the sepulture was finished.

At two o'clock the various societies and orders formed in procession at the city hall, and headed by the band, playing a dirge, marched to Ross' opera house, where a large concourse of people had assembled.

Astoria division No. 1, Uniform rank, No. 1, K. of P., Astor Lodge No. 6, K. of P., Pacific Lodge No. 17, K. of P., Beaver Lodge No. 35, I. O. O. F., Ocean Encampment No. 13, I. O. O. F., Seaside Lodge No. 12, A. O. U. W., Cushing Post No. 14, G. A. R., members of the city council and citizens, composed the funeral procession.

After an impressive prayer by the Rev. M. D. Wilson, P. D. Winton announced singing by the choir. The Congregational church choir sang "Sleep thy last sleep," in a very effective manner. The G. A. R. memorial services for "Comrade Grant," so lately mustered out, was then begun, and tears gushed to many an eye at the touching reference to the vacant chair of a general who had set in front in accordance with the ritual of the order. Rev. Dr. Roberts then delivered one of his masterly five-minute addresses.

He said the whole nation was gathered around the bier of Grant. To the silent illustrations done in black and set in front of the fact that to-day the southern boundary line of the United States is the Mexican gulf and not Mason and Dixon's line. It had been suggested that a monument be built to the memory of the illustrious dead. What was the most fitting form in which that monument should appear. He thought the greatest, noblest, most appropriate, would be that he himself had raised twenty years ago a perpetual union. So long as the Union endures, so long will that enduring constitute Grant's best monument.

Some days ago Canon Farrar pronounced a fervid eulogy on Grant in Westminster abbey, before the elite of the English nation. Who in the stranger pens when the audience had swept out, he would have seen a bust of Sir Christopher Wren, with the inscription, "If you seek his monument, look around you." And so it might be said, "If you seek Grant's monument, look around you, at the thirty-eight states—a preserved and perpetuated nation." Every genuine American, whether he be an American by accident or by choice, is a living stone in this great temple of liberty. God grant that nothing ever shake that temple's base.

Dr. T. T. Cabanis spoke next. No man could justly withhold eulogy from Grant. When the work is considered which he carried to a successful issue, his mind furnishes no parallel. Washington made the Union, Grant preserved it. The speaker believed the south mourned the death of Grant as sincerely as the north. They had fought him and recognized a general who in their eyes their humiliation did not embitter defeat. When Grant was in South Carolina in 1862, he was shown a desolate heartstone and a naked chimney, and said that in all the south there was no monument of any kind that could be charged to his memory.

The speaker was followed by C. W. Fulton who said he was always ready to do homage to the memory of Grant. In all ages men had towered above their contemporaries, but Grant's name stands dim perspective of history these men loom like lone lonely peaks. But whether it be Cyrus or Caesar, or Alexander, or Hannibal, or Napoleon, the great differences was that while those were desolators, our American general was a benefactor, and in honoring him we honored ourselves.

Thos. Dealey was the next speaker. As a man who followed Grant's banner in the dark days of the rebellion, he came to say a few words about the death of a man who had fought Lee on the Potomac it was he that made Grant great. Had it not been for Lee, Grant would not have had so great a name. Generations past, present, and to come might pass away, but Grant's name would never pass away. No great general of ancient or modern times could approach Grant in the fertility of his resources, the unerring judgment he displayed and his prompt seizure of opportunities. Grant was unassuming as he rode down the lines he had a good word for the men and they loved him.

E. C. Holden was the next speaker. He said that all this majesty of woe, this unusual spectacle of a whole nation in tears betokened the hold the great general had on the popular heart. When Sumter was fired on Grant testified his loyalty by his prompt tender of services to the government and to-day the loyal heart of a united nation beats with regret for him who they have buried at Riverside. And yet it might be asked if his life work had not been accomplished, and if, indeed, there was after all, just cause to mourn.

Mr. Holden then read the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

AN OLD SWISDLER. But One That is Occasionally Successful.

The following precious document was received by a business man of this city last evening:

DEAR SIR:—No doubt when you receive this letter you will say "It is a trap for you to get you into the snare." But in the case, I obtained your name through my agent, who passed through your place. This is all I know of you. My purposes are far from malicious. Should you conclude to accept of my offer, I will give you my word that no person shall ever hear from me the least thing that passes between us. To be plain with you, I am dealing in "Green Paper Goods," of all denominations. Do you understand? Do you want anything plainer than this? If you do I will send you full and plain particulars, and will convince you that I can furnish you with a fine, safe and profitable article that can be used for all purposes, and no danger. Now, understand me; I ask no money in advance. I will give you plain, positive proofs that, should you need my assistance, I can and will help you out of any money or business trouble that you may be in. As my intentions are quite good, I will let you and as I will never harm you by word or action, I ask you as a just man, as a man of honor and principle not to expose or betray me. If I have made a mistake in sending you this letter, I ask you to let me hear from you where it is. My motto is and has always been, "If you can't do a fellow being some good, do him no harm," no matter what his calling may be. A word of advice in regard to this business. There are unprincipled men in this city advertising goods such as mine. They will send you circulars and make you all kind of promises, and should you be foolish enough to send them money you will never hear from them again. I am not willing to be taken through malice or selfishness to get your trade but to warn you against them should you at any time receive their circulars, and if you will make up your mind to write and place confidence in me, I will not write you until I have written to you. I will take it as a matter of honor and strict friendship between us, if you will notify me if these people send you their circulars, as I will not, under any consideration, trade with any person who has anything to do with them. I am the only person who can furnish you with a safe and profitable article, that will stand a critical test. I will, as a test of your confidence and honor, request the return of this letter, as I will not answer any communication unless it is returned to me, and I will also return yours. Send me your full name and address, that I may know exactly how to send you an answer. Hoping to hear from you at once.

I am, yours respectfully,

New York, 1885.

Accompanying the above disinterested epistle is a card on which is written "Geo. Guthrie, care Eggen, 18 West Third street, New York city."

It is hardly necessary to say that there is no law against Geo. Guthrie, or Eggen, or any other man working such a swindle, but there is a law that would land in the penitentiary any one convicted of passing or trying to pass the stuff.
