Not since the last state legislature adjourned was there such a racket heard in the webfoot nation as yesterday afternoon among the Chinese on Chenamus street: some lottery or raffle of some kind was being drawn or thrown or won or tossed or lost and the din was deafening. If noise was worth ten cents an ounce there was a million dollars at stake, It was a good deal like one night at Salem in the state senate last February when "the liberties of the dear people" was being eulogized by Jno. Myers of Clackamas.

Somebody's darling, who long ago wore on his clear, sweet face the lingering light of his mother's grace, was leaning on a crate of crockery in front of A. V. Allen's grocery store yesterday afternoon. He was sour, dirty, ragged and ill-smelling. He was too drunk to stand up, and not limp enough to collapse, so he leaned against the crate. Presently a couple of the boys came along and getting some brilliant carmine ink, decorated his nose till it glowed like a coal of fire. The poor old buth didn't know what a holy show he was making of himself, but sunk into a peaceful slumber, his nose gleaming like a lighthouse to warn passers by from like a lighthouse to warn passers by from the dangerous shouls whereon he had wrecked his humanity.

CLOSING SCENE AT THE RACE. Sandy Hook, Sept. 16.—As the Puritan crossed over the winning line the wildest excitement prevailed. Steamboats and sailing craft gathered around the light-ship. The whistle of the judges' boat, announcing that the Puritan had won this time and settled the question of the respective merits of the two styles of boats, and deciding that the cup shall remain on this side of the water, was the signal for a general blowing of whisles and firing of cannon on the part of the occupants of the various vessels, mingled with shouting and screaming and throwwith shouting and screaming and throw-ing of hats and general embracing. Such a pandemonium was seldom witnessed. A minute later, when the Genesto crossed the line, the noises and scenes were re-peated, if anything on a more elaborate scale. The gentlemen on board the Britisher gracefully acknowledged the manifestations of good feeling on the part of the enthusiastic crowds and lifted their hats in response to the cheers. Soon after the race was over the two racers were taken in tow by the club's tugs, which pointed their noses toward the city.

A THOUSAND A YEAR.

SANDT HOOK, Sept. 16.- 11 A. M .- The How an Economical Woman Managed on That Amount.

> The Richards were very comfortably off when married, having an income of $2500 per year. Julia, who had never been taught to save, spent freely; they kept two servants, lived well, had two children in the course of time, and when the youngest child was 5 years old Mr. Richards lost everything--how, I know not, but honorably. They "went home" to his father's, but Julia soon saw that it would not do, and when Phil found a situation at $1000 per year she insisted situation at $1000 per year she insisted on going to housekeeping. They had kept enough furniture to furnish a little house they had rented in the outskirts of S——. There was a parlor, bed-room, dining-room and kitchen on one floor, with three bed-rooms above, which Julia did not furnish. As she did her own work, she used as little space as possible. Before Laura started to look for a house she divided their weekly expenses thus:

For charity or church......$1 00 Clothes 4 00 Coal 1 00 Incidentals 1 00

After keeping house from May to Au-gust she found the grocer's bills could be kept within $3, the butcher's account often only amounted to $2, and as they had a good stock of clothes on hand, the $4 for clothes was rarely touched, while the coal amounted to about nothing, as they used an oil stove through the sum-mer. Laura hired a woman to wash on Tuesday, and as the washing was done by noon the woman swept the little house in the afternoon and scrubbed up the kitchen. Then, through the week, little by little, Julia ironed the easy pieces, and on Saturday, when her faith-ful woman came to iron the starched pieces, they were gotten out of the way by 11 o'clock, and then the house had another good sweeping. In this way Julia made her own work comparatively

Capt. Robert Carter said to-night that Sir Richard Sutton and Sir Wm. Levinge said nothing during the race, but watched its progress with interest. B.
Webb and Capt Carter denounce the Puritan's action in bearing down upon them as "sharp practice," and say that it would not be permitted if racing in Eaglish waters. They think she tried to crowd thom off their course.

Julia made her own work comparatively light.

I do not mean to say that she found it easy to do all this; she was very tired many times. The children were children, not saints. Dinner came around just as often, now that she had it to cook, as it had come when she gave no thought to such matters. Yet, after all,
we tire of any steady work at times,
and when the tired feeling came, if it would but believe it.

For instance, after dressing the children, getting the breakfast and washing the dishes Julia felt thoroughly tired.

There was her bedroom all in disorder, and most women would go to work, tired or not, to "put it straight." Not so with this wise woman. The windows were shielded by mosquito netting, and letting the sun and air fill the room, she rested on the dining-room lounge, readrested on the dining-room lounge, read-ing Bible stories to the children, or earning a verse or two of some poem It might be that parlor and bedroom did not get put in thorough order till the afternoon, but better a room out of or-afternoon, but better a room out of order than a body and spirit.

The trouble is that when most women
try to economize they save everything except their own strength—the most costly thing of all. In the afternoon Julia did her marketing, for her good aunt had warned her that she must see to every purchase; you can't send your orders on an income of $1000. She soon learned to use the fire on washing and ironing days for baking bread and learned to use the fire on washing and ironing days for baking bread and roasting a joint of meat and so save cooking on other days. Does her butcher's bill seem incredibly small? They did not have steak or mutton chops very often, I grant you, but Julia found she could buy a fine piece of roast beef for 13 or 14 cents a pound and then have two steaks cut off the joint. In the same way she bought a hind quarter of

But as winter came in Phil looked troubled. "We must have coal, Julia," he said one August night, "by the end of another month, and more than $1 worth a week."

"Certainly we must," said Julia, cheerfully, and you see since last May I've been saying for it. What do you think of that to spend in coal now that it is so cheap?"

Phil took the roll of bills and counted them slowly, with glistening eyes. How much care, thought and self-denial that little roll represented. "I think," he said, "a wife who has

That was a happy evening for Julia, and she was amply paid for all her sacrifices. Phil, on his side, had his surprise, for he had hardly touched the $2.50 a week Julia had insisted he should take for his clothes. Car fares on rainy days had cost him something, but save for that and some shoes, his share of the weekly allowance was ind by—nearly $30, to add to Julia's roll.

"I don't see how you've done it," said Phil, admiringly. "When I think of our wretched life at the big house, I can't be grateful enough to you for helping is my mother is sure you must keep a servant or have one come in! She asked me what you did with your tea-dishes, Julia, and I could truly say I did not know, I never thought of it till then, but it is rather remarkable that you never wash dishes at night."

"Come in the kitchen and I'll show you my contrivance," said Julia, and led the way to a washtub with a tightly fitting cover. Lifting the cover she showed Phil the dishes lying in the wa-

"But, Julia, suppose you should be taken sick or the children ii!?"

"Well, dear, that's why I'm so glad of these savings. Let us get ten tons of coal and put $30 in the bank for an emergency fund. We can add to it the amount laid aside for coal each week and more too, and I have been anxious to propose that we should even be more economical. Would you agree to oatmeal and milk with bread and butter and coffee for breakfast?"

"Do we not need meat or fish?"

"The doctors say not. Suppose we try it? Then, if now and then we made our dinner off a good pot of soup, would and adding vermicelli and tomato, we and adding vermiceili and tomato, we have soup enough for two or three dinners—cost, 29 cents. Then, if it were necessary to economize further, I could devise still other ways."

This brief recital will show how one family lived happily upon $1000 a year in a city. No doubt experience would make better and easier living possible upon the same sum, so long as good upon the same sum, so long as good health continued. Without that all economical schemes fall, and even a for-tune cannot bring happiness.—Phila-delphia Times

State vs. County.

The case of the State of Oregon vs. Multnomah county, was tried before Multnomah county, was tried before Judge Smith yesterday and submitted. Treasurer Hirsch, on behalf of the state, sues for a deficiency in its proportion of the taxes collected in the county, and the county replies that the state has only suffered loss in proportion to the county, wing to rebates and uncollectable taxes. It is a test case. There are several counties in the same situation as Multnomah, and the suit was brought to settle the matter.—News, 17.
