Scientific Miscellany.

A German ornithologist, Dr. A. C. E. Baldamus, has specimens of the nests and eggs of 2,000 species of birds, mostly European.

It has been recently proven that earth worms are capable of regenerating tissue, large pieces cut from their bodies being replaced by new growths.

The discovery was recently announced of a fossil air-breathing animal of an earlier age than any before known—a scorpion from the upper Silurian deposits of Sweden. A cockroach is winged from a still more remote period—the middle Silurian—has since been found in France.

Flying fish do not fly is the assertion of Dr. K. Möbius, a German zoologist. The muscles of their pectoral fins are too small to sustain the weight of the body in the air. The impulse to which they owe their long shooting passage through the air is delivered while they are still in the water, by the powerful masses of muscles on both sides of their body.

A Quinine Substitute.—The doukdake plant (Cephalina esculenta, Schum) has been described to the Paris Academy of Sciences as an anesthetic and febrifuge capable of replacing quinine, as well as a dye yielding a beautiful yellow color. It grows in West Africa, and resembles the Morinda of the South Sea Islands quite closely in many respects. Its active principle is doukdakine.

A New Food.—In the seed of the cotton-tree, of which several varieties are cultivated in Bolivia, a correspondent of the French academy announces the discovery of the richest of all known grains in nitrogeous substances. He is convinced that the flour of this seed is destined to become an important article of food. A paste made from it may serve as a substitute for milk.

Prompting Eye-Glasses.—The "microphotoscope," devised by a schoolmaster of the Isle of Man, is a pair of spectacles the rims of which are several micro-photographs, each provided with a little magnifying lens. The instrument is worn as an ordinary pair of spectacles, and the wearer may at any time see the pictures by slightly turning his eyes. A public speaker may thus have in view photographs of his notes; a traveler, maps or tables of information; a detective, a list of criminals sought; and so on.

Temperature Perception.—A German physiologist, Prof. Eulenberg, has found that different parts of the body are very unequally sensitive to differences of heat and cold, the sense of temperature being most acute in the forehead and the back of the hands, and least active in the back and the upper part of the abdomen. At the former spots differences of about a third of a Fahrenheit degree were distinctly perceived, but at the other two points differences were only detected when reaching nearly two degrees.

Chemistry for the Kitchen.—Mr. W. Mattien Williams states that he is making experiments to learn the efficiency of the diastase of malt, and also that of various acids, in converting vegetable tissue into dextrins and grape sugar. When a process for effecting such conversion is made generally available our food supplies will be greatly extended. Turnips and similar vegetables will become delicate diet for invalids; horse-beans will be better than beef; and delicate biscuits and fancy pastries, as well as ordinary bread, will be produced from sawdust and wood-shavings plus a little leguminous flour. This may be done now.

Chemists have long been able to transform old shirts and rags into sugar in their laboratories. It has yet to be done in the kitchen.

Lacustrine Revelations.—Since 1873 no less than 19,599 relics of the Proto-Helveticans, as the prehistoric lake-dwellers of Central Europe have been named, have been dug from the beds of lakes Neuchatel and Bieme. Swiss museums have received 13,678 of these objects, while Dr. Goss, of Neuville, has nearly 6,000. Dr. Goss finds evidence that the progress of this vanished race was marked by three successive stages—an age of stone, an age of bronze, and an age of iron. There may also have been an age of copper, preceding that of bronze. Remains of villages of the stone age are most abundant—thirteen having been found in lake Bieme, with only two of the bronze age—but those belonging to the era of metals are much more extensive. Besides the stone and metal implements, various wooden objects have been found, such as canoes, an ox yoke, fragments of tables and benches for boats, hammers and spades. No complete dwelling has yet been found among the villages of the lakes, but charred planks and timbers remain to tell of the mysterious conflagration in which perished a remarkable and ancient civilization.

Dabbling the Funkeys.
The late John Henegge Jesse, the well-known author, had an aversion amounting to a positive phobia, for the British Jeasms. He has been known to stand in St. James' street on a drawing-room day, at the edge of the curb, with the end of his stick, which he dipped into the road-puddle, dab the immaculate stocking of the passing funkeys, who, as he well knew, dare not move from their stations, accompanying the act with much opprobrious language.

The Alliterative Mania.
The advantage supposed to inhere in an alliterative heading or title-page is not a device of the modern news editor. It seems to have been worked for all there was in it by the religious tract writers who flourished so plentifully in Cromwell's time.

In 1626 some one published in London a pamphlet with the rather startling title: "A Most Delectable, Sweet, Perfumed Nonsense for God's Saints to Smell At." Later on another peculiar man presented the reading world with "Sauls for Flying Love" and "A Pair of Bellows to Blow Off the Dust Cast Upon John Fay." Cromwell's time, however, was most noted for queer title-pages. A work on charity, written then, was entitled, "Hooks and Eyes for Believers' Breecches." Another author, in his attempt to elevate poor, human nature, called his labor in that direction "High-Heeled Shoes for Dwarfs in Holiness," and just then "Crumbs of Comfort for the Chickens of the Covenant," were thrown out to tempt the literary appetite. A Quaker, as serious as quaint, who was imprudently on one of the charges so easily found in those days, sent forth from his prison cell "A Sign of Sorrow for the Sinners of Zion," breathed through a hole in the wall of an Eastern vessel, known among men by the name of "Samuel Fish." About this time another book, with a queer and ludicrous title-page, appeared—"The Spiritual Mustard Pot to Make the Soul Sneeze with Devotion." Others stood on "Salvation's Vantage Ground, or Leaping Stand for Heavily Believers," and fired "A Shot at the Devil's Headquarters Through the Tube of the Cannon of the Covenant," which was said in the preface to be a language so plain that the most "illiterate reprobate could not fail to understand." A "Reaping Hook, Well Tempered for the Stubborn Ears of the Coming Crop, or Biscuits Baked in the Oven of Charity, Carefully Conserved for the Chickens of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit and the Six-winged Seraphs of Salvation," startled lovers of the curious to-day. But to cap the climax of the odd title-page mania an ambitious author declares his book to be "Seven Sobs of a Sorrowful Soul of Sin; or the Penitential Psalms of the Princely Prophet David, Whereunto are Annexed William Huinnis' Handyful of Honeysuckles and Divers Godly and Pithy Ditties, now newly sentimental."

It was an Arizona man. With steady hand he filled the can; for, as was usual with him, he filled the chalice to the brim. Appalled, affrighted and dismayed to see the wholesale liquor raid, the gentlemen behind the bar, in trembling tones, exclaimed: "Look Javar! You are mistaken, pard! I'm thinking, That isn't cider that you're drinking!"

The stranger's face grew dark and sad, he looked as though he had it bad. In tones of grieving, mild rebuke, he said, with a reproachful look: "You're mighty right stranger, good heavens! I wouldn't drink that much cider for fifty dollars."

What piece of horse furniture does an old bachelor resemble? A six-shooter.
