The Deadly Chewing Gum, Some people are continually advocating the cause of total abstinence, and waging war upon the hard cider when it stirreth itself aright in the Venetian glass. But they do not seem to know there is a vice equally as bad as that, which stings like a centipede and bites like a dose of Jamaica gin-ger, holding in its grip some of the fairest young ladies of our broad republic, and as I said before, I deem it was data to a space to the world the it my duty to expose to the world the ravages made in our best families by that grim monster who enters into the very heart of our domestic fabric under the name of "Chewing Gum." I once knew a black-haired girl with great, liquid, laughing, pleading eyes that looked like a big white laisy with a black spot in the center, and breath like a clover-fed Polled Angus heifer. She could have more fun than anybody at a church social or roller skating rink carnival, and her merry laugh filled the house with more mirry hand and song and silver-plated melody Ithan any amateur opera company that ever stopped at the entrance to the Grand Canon. All the boys were "dead gone" on her, and she was mashed on several herself. But in an unguarded moment she commenced nibbling at and chew ing her mother's beeswax. This did not long satisfy her. The cruel thralldom had begun. Wheaever she felt depressed, all broke p, or statu quo, as the case might be, there was nothing that would remove her ennui and fill the dark, fathomless, aching void in her system which was situated under the south end of her red corset, but the conscience deadening, soul-destroying debaser of girl hood — beeswax. From this she gradually sunk lower and lower; became more debased and reckless, till she finally could not shake off the chains that bound her, and there was hardly an hour that she was not under the baleful influence of spruce gum or taffy on a broom-straw.; If she could not get spruce gum to assuage her mad thirst she would chew on the rubber top of a lead pencil or strings out of an old elastic suspender. She gradually pined away till she wouldn't average over twelve ounces to the pound. She could no longer sit on one foot and be happy.

Life to her was filled with mahog-any colored gloom lit up only with wax Christmas tree candles, and seemed but a rickety rusty waste of stub-toed grief. At last she took an overdose of gum overshoes and tar-roofing one day, and her soul glided off for the land where hot-house plants never freeze.

If this little sketch will help any young girl in the community to shun chewing gum, like she would the soft dude of the cultured East, and induce her to lead a better and nobler life in the future, it will have accom-plished a mission for which the writer is truly thankful in advance.

New York has a drinking room decorated with 11,000 champagne corks. Traced on the ceiling are all sorts of pretty ornamental designs and the names of popular actresses and singers. On the walls are more of those designs with other names interwoven in them. The ornamental work is made 'entirely of champagne corks. Some have glistening metal tops and others are strung with cordlike tendrils. To add to the unique appearance of the room the wall lights, which are electric loops, are enclosed in real champagne bottles, sealed with plaster of paris, which are held in hands modeled in bronze. Tiny champagne baskets of corks
